This Strikes Us ...

A Sojourner's Truth Editorial

Oh yes, he did!

We've all heard the whispers, haven't we? The ones that began, oh ... about 100 days after the inauguration of the nation's first black president.

What has he done?

Just last week, one of this paper's guest columns contained such accusations – that President Obama has failed to accomplish anything, that his “Yes, We Can” campaign rhetoric had bashed heads with Washington reality and come up short.

But as pundits everywhere know, nothing quite succeeds like success. And President Obama's success in getting the almost-universal health care coverage package passed on Sunday night is a resounding accomplishment indeed.

Obama accomplished what a number of presidents over the past 100 years could not. That list includes both Roosevelts, Truman, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon (yes, indeed, Nixon, who probably came the closest over that 100-year struggle to pass a comprehensive health care plan – one that Obama and today's Democrats would have happily accepted) Carter and, in recent times, Clinton.

Clinton, of course, suffered an embarrassing defeat, a humiliation on universal health care coverage that ultimately led to his party's loss of control of Congress two years into his presidency.

Now, with his own poll numbers sagging, Obama had the opportunity to renew enthusiasm in his presidency and, make no mistake about it, he did just that.

Americans just love the smell, the appearance, of success. Especially success that comes from bold action. Obama has taken just that type of bold action to breathe life into the health care legislative process even in the face of the loss of a crucial Senate seat in Massachusetts. Ironically, of course, it was the seat that the champion of health care legislation, Ted Kennedy, had held since the dawn of time. And equally ironic was the fact that it was Ted Kennedy's endorsement that gave Obama's presidential aspirations such a boost. That endorsement came after the candidate promised the Lion of the Senate that he would give health care his early and undivided attention upon assuming the Oval Office.

Nothing succeeds like success, as Obama himself would note during the early primaries to explain his miraculous ascendancy over Hillary Clinton.

Lyndon Johnson once remarked during the terrible latter years of his presidency when nothing was working in Vietnam that his standings in the polls would sky rocket if he took bold action in that country – no matter what type of bold action it was. If he nuclear bombed Vietnam into oblivion or flew over hat-in-hand to ask Ho Chi minh for peace, the result in the polls would be the same – instant intensified popularity.

So let's withhold comment on the actual health care policy for the moment and ponder the political consequences of the bill's passage – presuming nothing untoward happens in the Senate this week to derail the process.

Polls show that Americans are deeply divided on the health care package and that disapproval of the current bill has risen over the past several months – signs that might indicate Obama's popularity could take another hit.

However, polls also indicate that most Americans – about 62 percent – want health care reform and that opposition to government involvement has actually decreased over the last several months. In other words, it's not the concept of universal health care coverage that has been a problem for most Americans, it has been the political process that has proved distasteful.

The polls also indicate that Americans, in general, really know little about what's in the massive, 2,000 page bill that supporters promise will include 32 million more Americans in the health care system within nine years.

And the same polling numbers show that Americans fault Republicans for their intransigence and believe that Obama has been sincere in his efforts at bi-partisanship.

All of these numbers indicate that the Democrats will probably not take an unmanageable hit in the 2010 elections.

Obama stepped up and led the charge for reform and now promises to go on tour touting the benefits that Americans can expect from the legislation.

So nothing succeeds like success and as the president hits the road, he has the aura of success about him. The trek will probably prove to be more victory tour than educational summit on what to expect from the bill. There is, after all, an election coming up and the Republicans will be rolling the dice and counting on voters to express disenchantment with health care coverage reform at the polls.

The problem with that strategy is that, as we noted, Americans really do want health care coverage reform and now that they have it, the ugliness of the process will matter much less than it did just a few short days ago.

Fervor is the weapon of choice of the impotent. – Frantz Fanon

To African-Americans the script is familiar. Progressive social change – at almost every critical historical juncture – has been met with frenzied threats, epithets and invectives hurled from the angry, twisted and contorted faces of mob-crowds made up of those who stood to gain from the status quo.

That was also the case over the weekend as the House of Representatives passed historic legislation reforming the nation's health care system despite media over-coverage of the pathological politics of disruption exhibited by opponents of the bill.

The public use of the N-word was resurrected and used to assault civil rights hero Congressman John Lewis of Georgia. Spit and saliva were heaved from the inflamed mouths of zealous protesters towards Congressman Emmanuel Cleaver (D-Mo.) as public violence upon black leadership resurfaced in a new form.

The protesters in the streets were egged on by sign-waving Republican legislators from the halls of Congress in shouts of "Kill the Bill," and other political threats and code words intimating capital violence.

Congressman Patrick Kennedy (D-RI) in a press release following passage of the health care reform bill quoted Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. who said "Of

I had a nightmare that I want to share with you. No, this was not caused by some strange sage cheese that I had with a rye cracker nor was it generated by some smoked salmon pate with an undercooked dill dressing.

It was caused by comments I read where some black people are nonplussed about how the Catholic Schools are able to keep and maintain a high-level educational system and, into which system, black parents have gladly placed their kids assuming they have the bucks or their kids can get scholarships to do it.

It is about an attitude of commitment and a willingness to make pledges of time and money to further a grander goal and that is the proper education of one's kids so that when they graduate, they are not embarrassed by their lack of cognitive and rhetorical skills; and their inability to compete with their peer group for jobs and positions.

It is about changing one's perception of what is important and what is marginal. What is important is making sacrifices of time and effort and money so that the next generation can excel.

It is about deferring the purchase of that 200 dollar pair of Jordan shoes or the latest X Box or Wii system so that your child can get a math/science tutor so he or she can pass the SAT or ACT tests and get into Howard or Harvard.

"There Is Fat in This District"

By Steven Flagg
Guest Column

Speaker after speaker streamed forward as his or her name was called to plead with the Toledo Board of Education to save a school, art and music specialists or in opposition to cuts from school athletics to bus transportation. Several said they would support the TPS income tax levy, some only if their program was spared.

The public hearing at Start High on St. Paddy's day had the feel of a pep rally for the May 4 levy. Others suggested it was more like a well-organized union rally since TFT, TAAP and AFSCME members attended en masse, easily the largest group represented that evening. The public hearing the next evening at Rogers was not attended as well, more subdued and absent the union presence although TPS employees again made up half or more of those attending.

Francine Lawrence, TFT president, led off the procession of speakers and was followed by TAAP and AFSCME representatives. Lawrence was loudly applauded by teachers in attendance when introduced and with obvious exuberance when she concluded her remarks by suggesting that board members need to "chop from the top."

Lawrence offered a number of criticisms and one solid suggestion. If the levy failed, she suggested the district should adopt a four-day school week stating it would save significant monies.

Why would Lawrence or TPS wait for a levy defeat to implement a new work week that could save art and music specialists and several school programs perceived as successful? Certainly such a change is not without challenges, but they seem reasonable as compared to the consequences. Some state laws must be waived or changed. But since legislators have struggled mightily with the state budget, they're likely to be amenable.

One Lawrence remark was surprising and a bit of a shocker during a levy campaign. Lawrence said twice consecutively, "There is fat in this school district." On this Lawrence gets whole-hearted agreement from many in this community. There may be disagreements of where the "fat" is, but you heard it from the TFT president herself that "fat" exists.

Lawrence should share these cost-saving opportunities with the public. Her members' salaries are from taxpayer dollars and their ideas are an important contribution to the discussion.

Most of those who spoke at the public hearing asked that their programs or special interest be saved. The Toledo Technology Academy was amply represented by students and parents. The students came prepared and eloquently articulated the value of TTA and their experiences. It was a testament to those involved parents and the students of TTA.

With TTA and Early College High School slated for elimination, the logical next question would be why the elementary academies at Grove Patterson and Old West End were not listed as potential cuts? Superintendent John Foley stated on several recent occasions that all programs not required by state law were identified for Board review.

The longer school days and curriculum at GP and OWE result in greater costs per student than the average TPS elementary school. GP and OWE programs are not mandated by state law.

All four programs serve about 1100 students or 4.2 percent of the approximately 26,000 TPS students.

So, is the current lame duck superintendent being honest with us? Were all programs evaluated and sent to board members for review?

TPS has strategically identified programs or services and offered them in sacrifice to create the greatest amount of emotional turmoil. Logic takes a holiday when proposed cuts appear callous and are programs perceived by many to be valuable and enriching. They seem even more heartless because TPS has not developed nor articulated a set of criteria by which they will make these cuts. Angst always runs higher when you can not reasonably predict what will happen in these situations.

In the end, it is to the advantage of the entrenched educational elite to assure that everybody's ox gets gored and that emotions prevent clear thinking regarding a levy that will drain $18 million from the private sector of our local economy.

How else do you pass a levy in these economic times when TPS has been less than forthcoming about its operations and where great public cynicism regarding the safety and efficacious use of taxpayer dollars is evident?

The "Ayes" Have It: President Obama, Speaker Pelosi Lead Health Care Coverage Overhaul

By Fletcher Word Sojourner's Truth Editor

Running as a Progressive in the election of 1912 to re-capture the office he had left four years earlier, former President Theodore Roosevelt spoke of the need to reform the nation's health care system in order to bring affordable care to the less fortunate citizens of the richest country on earth.

Ninety-eight years later, on Sunday March 21, 2010, the Rooseveltian dream was finally realized. The House of Representatives, led by Speaker Nancy Pelosi and prodded, pushed and nudged by President Barack Obama, approved legislation that will expand, say the crafters, health care coverage to 32 million Americans who are currently lacking such protection.

By a margin of 219 to 216 - all Republicans voting against the measure as did 34 Democrats - the House passed the controversial bill. "This is what change looks like," said Obama after the historic vote. "This is change we can believe in."

Yesterday, the president signed a bill into law that Democrats hailed as part of the other ground-breaking social legislation of recent decades.

"This is the civil rights act of the 21st Century," said Rep. Jim Clyburn of South Carolina, the top-ranking African-American member of the House.

"We will be joining those who established Social Security, Medicare and now, tonight, health care for all Americans," said Pelosi after the vote.

Perhaps not all Americans and, certainly, not in the near future. The bill proposes to ultimately cover an estimated 75 percent of those presently uninsured but not in full for another nine years.

What the bill will do almost immediately is provide immediate access to high-risk pools for people with no insurance due to pre-existing conditions.

Within six months, the legislation prevents insurers from denying coverage to people when they get sick; will prevent insurers from denying coverage to children with pre-existing conditions; will prevent insurers from imposing lifetime caps on coverage and will require insurers to allow children to stay on their parents' policies until they turn 26.

By 2014, the bill will provide subsidies for families earning up to 400 percent of the poverty level - currently about $88,000 a year for a family of four - to purchase health insurance; will require most employers to provide coverage or face penalties and will require most individuals to get coverage or face penalties.

The plan calls for health coverage to be expanded to the additional 32 million by 2019.

Democrats were jubilant after their victory. The Republicans ... not so much.

"If we pass this bill, there will be no turning back," warned House Minority Leader John Boehner (R-OH). "In a democracy, you can only ignore the will of the people for so long and get away with it."

"We will be joining those who established Social Security, Medicare and now, tonight, health care for all Americans,"

After the vote, however, Republicans were indeed claiming that they wanted, and intended, to turn back. A number, including Senator John McCain of Arizona, Obama's opponent for the presidency in 2008, vowed to do all they can to repeal the legislation in the future.

"We will not allow this to stand," said Rep. Michele Bachmann (R. MN).

The aftermath of the vote brought no political unity to the land. Eleven Republican states' attorneys generals immediately declared that they will bring suit against the bill in federal court over what they perceive to be the unconstitutionality of forcing people to purchase health care coverage whether they wish to or not. Since the courts have long permitted the federal government to force citizens to pay into Social Security and provide financial coverage for their future, it is unlikely that Obama, and his Democratic allies, are nonplussed by such maneuvering.

In the immediate future, the president plans to hit the road and tout his legislative victory and the benefits in the plan to voters who have become disenchanted with the bill - or at least what they perceive to be in the bill - over the last several months of congressional wrangling.

And, just a little further off loom the mid-year elections. Can Obama generate enough enthusiasm throughout the land to prevent a serious erosion of his party's strength come November?

The Republicans are counting on a voter backlash. The Democrats are holding their collective breath.

all forms of inequality, injustice in health care is the most shocking and inhumane.”

Kennedy also said that the legislation is a “victory for the millions of Americans who have been discriminated against in the past.”

Indeed, African-Americans are more likely to lack health insurance than whites. As a result, they are more likely to suffer negative health outcomes and disparities including a higher proportion of debilitating diseases and preventable deaths. But beyond these racial overtones, there appears to be something even more sinister and barbarous at the core of the unanimous, hostile Republican resistance in this long-running uncivil war to provide medical coverage to millions of uninsured Americans.

The need for health care, which began as reform primarily to benefit the mostly poor and minority uninsured, started to intensify in recent years as the fallout spread to other socio-economic groups. The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation indicates in a 2010 study that while soaring premiums from rising health insurance costs hits everyone, America’s middle class were hit hardest.

“The facts show that everyone is suffering right now, regardless of income. The cost of a family insurance policy has risen 81 percent since 2000 while median household income has fallen 2.5 percent. For middle-class families, that means a bigger piece of the household budget must go to insurance. Families may have to go without coverage, delay needed care or face bankruptcy if anyone in the family gets seriously ill,” the report concludes.

Yet the new legislation spares nearly 18,000 preventable deaths annually for those who could not afford to visit the doctor or obtain surgical procedures. It also allows as many as 32 million people (many white/middle class) to be covered who were previously uninsured and enables many other under-insured consumers to purchase a “high-quality insurance product at a reasonable price” in spite of their health condition or socio-economic status. It also provides coverage for dependent children up to age 26, prohibits lifetime and annual coverage limits and prevents policy cancellations on those who become ill.

Then why the angry, rampageous but concerted opposition by powerful insurance companies and special interests? And why the objections of the Republican Party, Tea Party members, the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Federation of Independent Businesses? And why spend millions of dollars to obstruct implementation of a bill which has tremendous life and cost saving ability and that provides more than 95 percent of children with a chance for a healthy start?

Some, including scholar Henry A. Giroux, Ph.D., insist that the battle is simply the manifestation of a re-emergent ideology which adamantly believes that “power should reside in markets and corporations rather than in governments and citizens.” Profits have become the “driving force of everyday life. Big government (a code word for the social state) is disparaged as wasteful and incompetent except when needed to bail bankers out of financial debt,” says Giroux in Youth In a Suspect Society.

Scholar Naomi Klein adds, “Any activity that might interfere with corporate power and profits is scrapped or dismantled, including environmental regulations, public education and social welfare. As a result, capital is redistributed upward, power transferred from traditional political localities to transnational corporations while armies of people become locked out, their lifestyles are written off and their basic needs go unmet.”

This causes entire groups, including the poor, unemployed, the young or elderly and even the middle class to be seen and regarded by a brutal marketplace that has no regard for individual or collective suffering, as disposable and unnecessary.

“When a system of health care relies on large for-profit entities designed to make money rather than improve health,” says Klein. And when profits mediate the supreme questions of life and death such as who lives and who dies, who survives or who perishes, or who matters and who doesn’t – based solely upon how much money it saves or generates, it becomes “not just a civil rights issue but also a moral issue.”

And more importantly, an issue which ultimately overcomes the venomous threats of retaliation made by the defeated.

brain cells other than a lot of visual sludge.

Kinda of like eating a bag of chips and cheese curls and wondering why an hour later you are hungry. You did not dine on the right food groups and your body is in a protest stage for better nourishment.

Well, that is what education is about. Unless and until you choose to dine on the proper food groups of math and science and English and art and music and logic and composition, as opposed to the history of the ping pong ball or the science of paper folding, you are “starving” your brain and killing your future.

I say all of the above to make my introduction into what I want to say and that is the black family and the ever-present black church had better pair up fast and save their own kids and reverse their seemingly downward negative educational plight because the institution known as the public school is beginning to topple into obscurity.

Take Toledo for an example. The real estate base for more levies to support fewer and fewer students in large high schools is ever shrinking.

John Q. Public is not happy with either the educational process or the end product that is being pumped out.

For too long the public schools have been in academic trouble and the social fabric in some of those schools leaves much to be desired. The fact that so many thousands of students over the years have jettisoned the public schools for the few openings in both parochial and charter schools indicates that we have a Gordian Knot that no one seemingly knows how to untangle.

The Catholic school system in not inexhaustible in the number of students that they can accept. They will either have to raise the tuition or their academic standards in order to keep from being flooded by anxious parents wanting a life raft out of the near drowning public school system.

When I first came to Toledo back in the 70’s, every school teacher I met had their precious Johnny or Suzie in either private or parochial schools. If that does not tell you volumes about how they felt about the system from which they drew their sustenance, nothing will.

My wife and I followed suit. Our three kids all went to parochial schools during their educational years and I do not regret it in the least. That is one reason why I could not in good conscience run for the school board because I could not govern over someone else’s child when my own did not attend public schools.

That is why I do not believe any teacher, principal, administrator, school board member or staff worker who works in or for TPS should be required to place their kids in no any other system than TPS.

It is rank hypocrisy to do otherwise. It makes no sense to have teachers living in Perrysburg, Rossford, Sylvania or Ottawa Hills commuting to Toledo to teach but yet their own kids go to private schools or religious schools or schools in their bedroom communities.

Now for the gist of this article. Black people and the dozens and dozens of black churches that populate the so-called inner or central city of Toledo have better wake up and read the chalkboard.

The public school system is in its death throes and the infrastructure to support it (property taxes), is groaning under the financial weight to keep it propped up.

What to do? Simple, but still missed for decades by black people and that is: unite and form your own quality oases of educational systems. It will take some time, but the effort needs to be started now. We have lost enough kids to a system that seemingly does not take their education seriously and which in turns jeopardizes everyone’s future.

ardizes everyone’s future.

Until the black churches start assessing themselves (translation: coughing up bucks on a systemic and meaningful basis) and forming alliances with parent groups and start buying land and/or rehabbing buildings to educate black kids, we are at the whim and mercy of tax levies and capricious school policies that are temperamental about the education of Shauntae and DeMarcus.

This is not an indictment of excellent teachers who make a difference every day they walk into a classroom and impart life and hope to attentive students but it is an indictment of any black person who does not see the value of owning and possessing the educational apparatus and future of your own kids. For too long we have depended upon the largesse and goodwill of “others” to do for us.

That is childish and retrogressive. You will never grow up into adulthood if you think that if all goes bad, someone wearing a cape and a mask will swoop in and bail you out...again.

The answer is not in more levies and mega schools but in parental commitment and financial disciplines to stave off a pending educational meltdown (unless the State of Ohio devises a different method by which to fund public education).

The parents who can, will bail out of the public system and support a system of their own choosing but those who are impoverished and subsequently left behind have got to band together, rethink the process and do for self. I have given this spiel for decades but you never know...maybe someday, someone will take up the chant and run the ball into the end zone and we will win.

22nd Annual Coalition of Black Trade Unionists' Banquet

By Brittany Jones
Sojourner's Truth Reporter

Once again, one of Toledo's long-standing local organizations celebrated Black History with a banquet at the Ramada Inn. This time the ballroom was accented with hints of bright yellow at the several tables where guests as well as political, labor and community leaders mingled.

The yellow was not a ran-

The theme was chosen with a particular motivation towards the community. It holds importance because, in these times, getting involved should be a priority. Cenia Willis, president of the local CBTU, expressed this priority.

"We're trying to encourage people to become educated about their issues and attraction was keynote speaker, David Claxton, who is the CBTU National Project Coordinator.

Prior to hearing Claxton's speech, Tim Gray, the master of ceremonies, began the event with greetings from Michael Hamilton (American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 349), Toledo Council President Wilma Brown and Brenda Hill, Toledo Public Schools board member.

The singing of the Black National Anthem led way to the Kaye Cook Dancers, a group of young dancers ranging from elementary school to high school that performs African dances. This night there were five. They introduced themselves to the audience and then danced to various African musical pieces like "Jambo (Hello)," and "Funga Alafia (Liberian welcome dance)."

date for Lucas County commissioner and Michael Ashford, Toledo City councilman.

Setting the atmosphere of community involvement and fighting injustice was a poem performed by Annette McClair titled, "We Do Understand."

Willis, Cerssandra McPherson of Toledo Federation of Teachers Local 250 and Cheryl Tyler-Folsom of AFSCME Local 544 gave presentations to this year's honorees and paid recognition to past awardees. This year, Ron Rothenbuhler, chairman of the Lucas County Democratic Party, received the Political Achievement Award.

Although he was unable to attend, C. Brown, Master funeral director of C. Brown Funeral Home, was given the Community Activist Award. Lastly, Stephen Kemp, assistant director of UAW Region 2-B, accepted the Trade Unionism Award.

As a special acknowledgment, the Cherry Street Mission Women's Ministry was the recipient of the Community Action Award. The CBTU presented a check of $500 to the ministry.

A musical selection of "I Need your Spirit," performed by the band Jesse & Company, led way to the introduction of the speaker carried out by Pierrette "Petee" Talley, secretary-treasurer of Ohio's AFL-CIO. Talley had worked with Claxton during their time in CBTU.

Claxton spoke of the importance of organized job and the fight for justice in the trade. He tackled the issue of the relevance of labor unions today. To answer this question, he referred to his first union job at 15 when he was a bagger at Kroger – when it first opened – and he was let go with no relevant reason. With a call to his union, he

Voces de la Frontera Includes Toledo in Its March for America Tour for Jobs and Immigration Reform

Sojourner's Truth Staff

Voces de la Frontera, a low-wage and immigrant workers' center that informs workers about their employment rights and promotes community organizing to achieve economic and social justice, arrived in Washington D.C. on Monday, March 22 as the culmination of a five-city tour – March for America – to highlight labor struggles.

The group held a rally in Toledo on Thursday, March 18, at the Jerusalem Missionary Baptist Church where several local leaders made it clear that they were in accord with the organization's goals.

"You're in a friendly place ... with working people," said Pete Gerken, president of the Lucas County Board of Commissioners and long-time labor leader. "Our town's a working town but my nephews and nieces, sons and daughters don't have the same opportunities that I had. They've taken away our jobs from us. This is a cause we know is true, we know is right. You can always count on Toledo, Ohio and our friends in labor to stick with you."

Also in attendance to show support for Voces de la Frontera and their mission to the nation's capital to lobby congressman on the issues of job creation and immigration reform, was WilliAnn Moore, president of the Toledo Chapter of the NAACP.

"Labor and the NAACP are two organizations with the same cause – we stand for jobs, we stand for justice," Moore told the visitors. "Everyone should have a decent-paying job. We need fair wages, we need safe, affordable housing."

The Voces de la Frontera road tour started in Milwaukee on March 17 to protest the loss of county jobs and then moved to Indiana where Whirlpool workers are fighting to prevent a plant closing and the loss of 1,000 jobs.

After Toledo, the group moved south to Cincinnati.

"The recent crisis has resulted in millions of people joining the ranks of the unemployed," said Christine Neumann-Ortiz, executive director of Voces de la Frontera. "There is more to come. We must support workers who are fighting to keep their jobs, build greater solidarity among working people and demand more from the federal government."

Exposing Truth Ministries Presents Like Mike: The Man in the Mirror

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

The only negative aspect to Exposing Truth Ministries latest production – Like Mike: The Man in the Mirror – as is the case with all of the company’s productions, is that you just don’t get enough chances to catch the darned thing.

Like Mike opened on Sunday, February 28 at the Lourdes College Franciscan Center Theatre... and closed on the same date. As luck would have it, however, the company’s management – Bonita and James Adams, playwright and executive producer respectively – are discussing a revival in October at a site yet to be determined. Stay tuned. If you missed February’s production, you certainly won’t want to miss it the second time around.

Like Mike chronicles the life of Leon Michael Williams, a young man who idolizes Michael Jackson. Three different actors play Leon at different stages of his life and perform some of the musician’s hits. In addition, the production features dance performances by the House of Adonis and the Springfield High School’s JROTC drill team.

The play’s message is that you don’t have to be famous to make a difference in people’s lives. In addition, the play brings an awareness of the issue of sugar diabetes since the main character is diagnosed with the chronic illness.

The play opens with a scene, naturally enough, of a man in the mirror. Leon Whittington, a veteran performer who started his singing career at the age of five, stars as the adult Jackson and gets the production off to a roaring start with his rendition of that song.

Following on the heels of that opening number is 11-year-old Tae’yana Willis and her classroom version of the Aretha Franklin classic “Respect.”

And we’re off. “It’s Possible” sung by young Jonathon Ford; “Ain’t No Mountain High Enough” by Ford and Sylvia Caniglia; “Ben” by Jordan Purley

(young Jackson); “Right Time, Right Place,” by The Difference, Joshua Bey, Vincent Rice and Damore Upchurch and more and more.

A multitude of songs and solid, stand-out performances by acting veterans such as Grant Walker, Roy Jenkins, Nicole Marie Rice, Cynthia Valentine and Gerald Quinn.

A very moving script by Bonita Adams and creative direction by Sylvia Carter. This is a night’s entertainment not to be missed in October.

Morehouse College Glee Club Performs at Third Baptist

By Brittany Jones
Sojourner Truth's Reporter

No instruments, four rows, 'Prince Albert' tuxedos and young men harmonizing.

Powerful voices filled the historic Third Street Baptist Church the evening of March 10.

It was not a choir, though, but the Morehouse College Glee Club from Atlanta GA—bringing a musical special treat to the city of Toledo.

This mini concert was brought to Toledo by the Tehillah International Ministries in memory of Doris Peoples-Bryant, who was the president and a member of the mission committee at the church for 18 years.

Rhonda Sewell, coordinator of public relations of Toledo Public Libraries, carried out the duty of mistress of ceremonies.

With welcomes and prayer by Reverend Glenn Jones of Third Baptist Church, the rest of the night was a melodic dedication to the woman who fought some time to bring this glee club here.

At 7 p.m., the young men hurried down the aisles—in a straight line—to their spots on the stage. Close on their heels was the conductor, David Morrow, who thanked the audience and said a few words before beginning the event.

"We are thankful that we are welcomed to the city of Toledo and we are excited," Morrow said. "Ms. Bryant has been trying to get us here for some time, so we are glad to finally make it."

Immediately after, a particular note on a harmonica was heard and, at that signal, the church was a music hall.

The concert was divided into seven sections, not including intermission. Musical numbers were selected from a variety of listed songs in the program. The first three sections had pieces of music that covered many categories including "Ubi Caritas," a Catholic hymn and jazz compositions like "Variations on Doo-Wah" by a black American composer, Wendell Logan. The concert also included selections of traditional black church music such as "Train's-a-Comin'" by Carlos Simon. Before intermission, selected Bible verses from the book of Psalms were performed.

The 15-minute intermission offered a presentation by the mission committee's chairman, Brenda Hill. She called the rest of the committee up and together, they donated $500 to the Doris (Peoples) Bryant Music Scholarship Fund. Bryant's daughter, Marguerite Bibb, received the check and gave thanks.

"My mother loved music. It was a comfort to her," Bibb said. "She loved this chorus and did everything to encourage the youth."

To bring in the second half of the event, the 2009-2010

Morehouse College Quartet put on a performance that brought an entertaining and comedic ambience. The songs came from the church repertory. Two that were performed were "Let the Church Roll on" and "Plenty of Good Room."

The Quartet included Tyrone Webb (graduating 2011), Aaron Paige (2010), Chancellor Jenkins (2011) and Brandon Waddles (2010.)

The Glee Club's wardrobe change into a type of prep-school uniform – embroidered navy blue blazers, striped ties and dress pants – signaled the last part of the show.

This closing bought love songs and songs from different languages including one Christmas song titled "Betelehemu," sung in the African language of Yoruba. As a spin, some members took up instruments that added to the African mood. The rest of the songs kept with the gospel theme.

Before the finale, the Bryant family presented

Morrow with a framed picture of himself and Delores Peoples-Bryant, as a gift.

With the help of Morehouse alumni from the audience, the Morehouse College Hymn was performed and the show was concluded.

Sewell gave thanks and acknowledgements to sponsors and guests. Senior Pastor Kevin Bedford gave blessings and then asked the congregation to hug their neighbor before departure.

This tradition of inviting choirs and glee clubs to the church has been going on well before Glenn Jones began his stint as the pastor of Worship and Music. He has been there for three years.

"I want to continue to expose choral organizations, such as college choirs, to the greater Toledo community," Jones said. "We keep inviting them so recipients can experience and soak up the music."

This particular concert has been in the planning since last year and Bryant was the driving force behind bringing Morehouse to Toledo.

Past choir performances included Central State, Renaissance High School from Detroit and Eastern Michigan University.

The Morehouse College Glee club embraces almost 100 years of tradition and excellence, come next year. Their quartet is older than the Glee club itself—it began in 1870 with notable quartet competitions, as oral tradition states.

David Morrow has been a member of the Morehouse College of Music faculty since 1981 and director since 1987. He is an alumnus of Morehouse with a Bachelor's of Arts degree. Morrow is currently the president of the National Association of Negro Musicians, Incorporated.

To donate to the Doris Peoples-Bryant Music Scholarship fund mail to Third Baptist Church, 402 Pinewood Ave, Toledo, OH 43604.

"She pushed people to go beyond their comfort level," Bibb said. "She was the encourager and loved young people."

University Authors and Artists Exhibit to Open

Special to The Truth

The 2010 University of Toledo Authors and Artists Exhibit will open with a reception honoring the authors and artists with works on display Monday, March 29, at 3:30 p.m. in the Ward M. Canaday Center for Special Collections in Carlson Library.

The exhibit will feature the works of nearly 200 UT faculty who have published books, journal articles or conference papers or have produced creative works since 2008.

The free, public exhibit will be on display Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. through April 30.

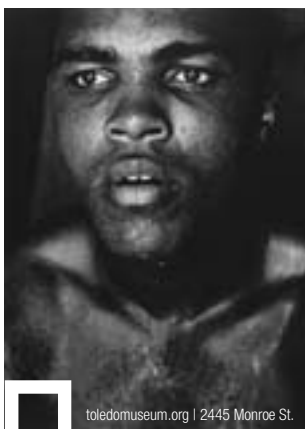

The display has been a yearly event in the library since 1950. This year's exhibit marks the return of the tradition after a two-year absence, according to Barbara Floyd, director of the Ward M. Canaday Center for Special Collections.

"The exhibit is an opportunity for faculty to show the products of their research and creativity to their colleagues, and for the community to see the type of work produced at the University," she said.

John Murray, Ph.D., UT professor of economics, will provide the opening remarks, and President Lloyd Jacobs will welcome the attendees.

For more information on the exhibit, contact Floyd at 419.530.2170.

Tupac Shakur: The Life and Times of an American Icon by Tayannah Lee McQuillar and Fred L. Johnson III, PhD

c.2010, Da Capo Press $15.95 / $20.00 Canada 276 pages, includes index

By Terri Schlichenmeyer
The Truth Contributor

Have you ever wondered why music is important to you?

Scientists have all sorts of explanations, but you probably can't live without your iPod because the tunes you love speak to you. Those songs move you, body and soul, and the singers say words only you wish you could say.

But despite the fame and fortune, the lives of those singers aren't as great as you think they are—or were, as in the case of one rapper. In the new book Tupac Shakur: The Life and Times of an American Icon by Tayannah Lee McQuillar and Fred L. Johnson III, PhD, you'll read about him.

Afeni Shakur was an activist. Born before the Civil Rights Movement, she joined the Black Panthers as an adult and quickly became a leader within the group. She conceived her first child while on bail for conspiracy charges (for which she was subsequently found not guilty). She named the child Lesane but later re-named him Tupac, after a revolutionary Incan emperor.

Though he was almost always homeless, had little to eat or wear and though many of the adults surrounding him were in trouble or in jail, Tupac Shakur grew up to be "a sensitive soul." He attended Baltimore School for the Arts, acted in plays and wrote poetry. He was well-versed in Shakespeare. His best friend was a white boy named John.

And then, to protect Tupac and his younger sister from violence in New York, Afeni sent them to California to live with a friend who turned out to be an angry alcoholic. Because he knew little about sports and a lot about literature, Tupac preyed upon by rougher boys near his new home.

Trying to fit in, Tupac briefly dealt drugs. He couldn't play basketball, but he was "stunning on the microphone," which gained the attention of a white woman who took him under her wing. She nurtured Tupac's talents and guided him and, within three years, he was a star.

But though Tupac's career was on the rise, his life was out of control. Because of the lyrics, his songs were banned and vilified. He began hanging out with people who were into drugs and guns. He was shot, spent time in jail and was shot again.

And in the end, Tupac's music couldn't save him.

Ostensibly a book about the life of a musician, Tupac Shakur is merely half that. The other half of the book is a reiteration of history and 1960s culture, tedious biographies, and plenty of repetition in scattershot chapters. True, authors Tayannah Lee McQuillar and Fred L. Johnson III include a thorough examination of the infamous feud between rappers but, though it was well-done, it wasn't enough. The "extras" simply overshadowed the good in this book. I would have been happier if Tupac Shakur had stuck with the story of Tupac Shakur.

If you're looking for a definitive biography on the musician, this book isn't quite what you want. It's okay, but overall, Tupac Shakur just doesn't wrap it up enough.

SAINT KATHARINE DREXEL AWARD PRESENTED AT BLACK HISTORY MONTH CONCERT

On Sunday, February 28, The Saint Katharine Drexel Award was presented to three individuals for their dedication and commitment to honoring diversity at St. Martin de Porres Church-Toledo.

2010 was the Tenth Anniversary of the canonization of St. Katharine Drexel by Pope John Paul II, and the 20th. Anniversary of the Toledo Symphony's Black History Month concerts at St. Martin de Porres Church-Toledo.

The recipients were Anna Moore, educator and over 30 years teaching career at St. Theresa School, St. Martin de Porres School, and Englewood Peace Academy; Deacon John Algee, St. John the Baptist-Toledo, original staff person at St. Martin de Porres Church, former teacher at Central Catholic High School, Pastoral Leader, and workshop presenter on youth and African American issues; and Dr. Donald Weathers, M.D., well-known physician in Toledo and one of the founding committee members for Toledo Symphony Concerts at St. Martin de Porres.

Saint Katharine Drexel devoted her life and fortune to God. Saint Katharine and the Blessed Sacrament Sisters founded many schools for African American and Native American children. Saint Katharine is also the founder of Xavier University in New Orleans, LA, the only historic Black Catholic University.

Xavier's Premedical Program is #1 in the nation in placing African-Americans into medical school and also placing students into related health professions such as osteopathic medicine, dentistry, veterinary medicine, optometry, podiatry, and public health health care administration.

Health Care Bill

Tonight, at a time when the pundits said it was no longer possible, we rose above the weight of our politics. We pushed back on the undue influence of special interests. We didn't give in to mistrust or to cynicism or to fear. Instead, we proved that we are still a people capable of doing big things and tackling our biggest challenges. We proved that this government—a government of the people and by the people—still works for the people.

Today's vote answers the dreams of so many who have fought for this reform. To every unsung American who took the time to sit down and write a letter or type out an e-mail hoping your voice would be heard—it has been heard tonight. To the untold numbers who knocked on doors and made phone calls, who organized and mobilized out of a firm conviction that change in this country comes not from the top down, but from the bottom up—let me reaffirm that conviction: This moment is possible because of you.

Most importantly, today's vote answers the prayers of every American who has hoped deeply for something to be done about a health care system that works for insurance companies, but not for ordinary people. For most Americans, this debate has never been about abstract tions, the fight between right and left, Republican and Democrat—it's always been about something far more personal. It's about every American who knows the shock of opening an envelope to see that their premiums just shot up again when times are already tough enough. It's about every parent who knows the desperation of trying to cover a child with a chronic illness only to be told "no" again and again and again. It's about every small business owner forced to choose between insuring employees and staying open for business. They are why we committed ourselves to this cause.

Tonight's vote is not a victory for any one party—it's a victory for them. It's a victory for the American people. And it's a victory for common sense.

If you have health insurance, this reform just gave you more control by reining in the worst excesses and abuses of the insurance industry with some of the toughest consumer protections this country has ever known—so that you are actually getting what you pay for.

If you don't have insurance, this reform gives you a chance to be a part of a big purchasing pool that will give you choice and competition and cheaper prices for insurance. And it includes the largest health care tax cut for working families and small businesses in history—so that if you lose your job and you change jobs, start that new business, you'll finally be able to purchase quality, affordable care and the security and peace of mind that comes with it.

So this isn't radical reform. But it is major reform. This legislation will not fix everything that ails our health care system. But it moves us decisively in the right direction. This is what change looks like.

Nor does this day represent the end of the work that faces our country. The work of revitalizing our economy goes on. The work of promoting private sector job creation goes on. The work of putting American families' dreams back within reach goes on. And we march on, with renewed confidence, energized by this victory on their behalf.

In the end, what this day represents is another stone firmly laid in the foundation of the American Dream. Tonight, we answered the call of history as so many generations of Americans have before us. When faced with crisis, we did not shrink from our challenge—we overcame it. We did not avoid our responsibility—we embraced it. We did not fear our future—we shaped it.

Thank you, God bless you, and may God bless the United States of America.

got his job back.

It impressed him that a person can have that much authority, he stated. That is why unions are relevant.

"If you got someone to hear your voice and also react to your voice, that's what a union is," Claxton said. "Workers need a voice in the workplace—just that simple."

He also discussed the decline in union membership and the fact that, historically, unions formed the middle class because people were getting well-paying jobs.

Unions, he stated, bring dignity and are essential to the health of the social fabric. He called for putting money in places that could create jobs like roads and green technology.

"We have to put Americans back to work with more openings to jobs," he said. "Put people to work in their communities so their local needs are being met."

He ended with the challenge for people to stand up and shout for more organized jobs because that would in turn result in higher wage employment.

To wrap up the night, there was a raffle and remarks from Tyler-Folsom and Willis.

Bowen-Hall concluded with a benediction.

"We know people need to get out and vote instead of complaining about issues," Willis said. "If you get out and get educated about issues and vote, it will mean a lot as far as what happens to your community."

Lima Hosts Its 2nd Annual Martin Luther King Jr. Oratorical Contest

By Sharon Guice
The Truth Reporter

Martin's dream live on today in young kids who recite his words in their own tone, passion and strength to convey his message from over 40 years ago.

Recently on a cold, snowy morning 10 youth, age seven to 17 gathered on the campus of Rhodes State College and Ohio State University at Lima to recite what would Martin Luther King Jr. say today if he were still alive, using the theme, "Revitalize, Rejuvenate, Recommit."

Phyllis Henderson, director of Community Outreach, welcomed every one to the program. Reverend Joel King, Jr. cousin to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and the MLK "Oratorical Commissioner, opened the program with a heart felt invocation.

Mayor David Berger presented the organization with an proclamation, declaring the day to make a difference. Jason Upthegrove of the NAACP was the master of ceremony. Mildred Clark, Ohio Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Toledo and Ohio "Oratorical" Contests Founder, showered the youth with praises for taken on an opportunity to showcase themselves and doing their part to keep the dream alive.

The Martin Luther King Oratorical Contest is founded on his legacy of "Brotherhood of Neighbors" and is kept alive by dedicated people such as Dorothy Lovell Jones, CEO and founder of I'M M.A.D. G.I.T. M.A.D., Inc.

Jones brought the contest to Lima in 2009 in an event that produced a first place winner, Caitlyn Merkel, who went on to recite her speech at the 2010

Martin Luther King Celebration in Columbus.

Second place winner of the 2009 contest became the first place winner at the Lima 2010 contest and will go on to Columbus, Ohio in April 2010 to the statewide competition as well as the first, second, and third place winners of the Lima contests.

Jones, the founder of the I'M Making A Difference Get Involved To Make A Difference Inc., is a poet and published author of inspirational poetry and stories.

He is a visionary who enjoys creating stuff and, consequently, has created a company called "Creating Stuff Productions," that is designed to create poetry, videos, graphic images, business cards, invitations, etc. Creating Stuff Productions is a division of her parent company, Set Me Free Productions. She uses her passion for writing poetry and inspirational words to encourage the heart, uplift the spirit, and inspire the souls of people.

Thus the inspiration to bring the Martin Luther King Oratorical Contest to Lima inspiring youth through the legacy of the Civil Rights Movement to get involved and make a difference.

Jones talked to any and all parents and youth who would listen to get involved in the I'M M.A.D.G.I.T. M.A.D. organization encouraging them with the possibility of winning scholarship money towards a college education.

Ten youth turned out to recite their orations to a crowd of about 100 people before judges—Lewis Jones, Ruthy L. Mills, Jerry Hunt, Angela Hall and Vickie Beining — after hearing Nancy Wilkerson the public relations director of the organization review the rules and regulations for the contest.

Any child in K-12 grade in Lima/Allen County may enter the contest and this year's Micaiah Moore, age seven, from Heritage Arts Magnet was the first place winner in the Primary Division and Landin Schumacher, age seven, second place winner from Shawnee Elmwood Elementary.

The Intermediate Division first place winner Merri Merkel, age 10, also attends Heritage Arts Magnet School. The Junior Division students included of John Merkel, age 13, first place winner attends North Middle School; second place winner, age 11, Courtney Clemens is a student of Shawnee Middle School and 12-year old third place winner Terrill Minor who attends St. Gerard Catholic School.

Seniors Division first place winner, Brandon Warren, age 17 is a student at Shawnee High School; Caitlyn Merkel, age 16, second place winner of Lima Senior High; Angelina Smith, age 16, of Lima Central Catholic, third place winner and Ebony Horison, a 17 year old Lima Shawnee High School.

Each student worked with dedication to research the life and times of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and other great civil rights leaders. After researching the material, the youth wrote an essay to recite before the judges, who turn in votes on a first, second, and third winner in each division of the contest. The winners move on to the statewide competition held in Columbus, Ohio in April. The first place winner of the statewide contest will to get recite their essay before the governor of Ohio, the next January on King's birthday.

The Lima contest also has a ward for people in the community who has made a difference, called the "Making A Difference." This award is presented to individuals in their community who have gone above and beyond the call of duty. They exemplify the core values that Dr. King spoke of when he described the "Beloved Community." They care about their communities and have made significant changes in order to make a difference in the lives of others. They believe in diversity and that every member of society is important and worth developing. The award is open to all Ohio residents who have made a difference in their community.

The 2010 award recipients are Karel Oxley, Superintendent of Lima City Schools and Heidi Yoakum. Yoakum currently serves as a manager in the Community Education and Engagement Department for State Treasurer Kevin L. Boyce.

Guest speaker for the event was the Honorable Kevin L. Boyce, Ohio Treasurer of State. Boyce who understands the importance of serving one's community encouraged the youth to continue to make a difference by serving their community.

Shawna McGriff and Kevin Jones, II entertained the audience with song and mime dancing.

The winners declared and awards presented, Reverend Diana Shurelds closes the program with benediction.

To get involved with the I'M M.A.D. G.I.T. M.A.D., Inc organization, email andimad@earthlink.net or send mail to Making A Difference, Inc., P. O. Box 361, Lima, Ohio 45802.

My View

By Jack Ford
The Truth's Political Columnist

can be expected to appeal to urban Ohio voters. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc so she understands women club movements. Brown is the sister-in-law of Leo Brown, a former great football player at The Ohio State University all the way back in 1954 - Woody Hayes first great team.

Toledo caught a glimpse of Gov. Ted Strickland's running mate, Yvette McGee Brown, last Friday, March 11, during a visit at the annual Urban League banquet.

Brown, a former Franklin County juvenile court judge, was introduced to the crowd of 400 attending the dinner but did not speak. State Representative Edna Brown took Yvette Brown from table to table greeting Toledoans.

Yvette Brown is a charming, quite attractive black woman who slate this year after having had Ken Blackwell for the posts of Secretary of State, treasurer and governor in years past.

It seems to me that State Rep. Edna Brown is running a lackadaisical campaign for the Senate. Brown needs to gear up and compete for the news stories as her primary opponent, Toledo City Councilman Joe McNamara is doing.

Joe Mac is speaking out on everything from the old United Way building demolition to the city's budget crisis. Brown needs to follow suit so she can match the coverage that Joe Mac is receiving.

The lay-offs in the City of Toledo are quite painful to consider but are the inevitable result of the pension pick-up granted by Mayor Carty Finkbeiner and City Council in 2005-2006. No one who voted for these pick-ups should be returned to office. It was known at the time that there was not enough money for such an extravagant benefit yet only a few councilmen had the courage to vote no.

Kudos to Earl Murry, Ph.D., and Judge Keila Cosme for getting their yard signs out early. They are trying to win and they want you to know it right now. Murry may be the sleeper in the race for commish in that he has the most government experience of anyone running for office today. Murry is a former civil service commissioner, former executive director of Dayton Public Schools and a former college professor and administrator at The University of Toledo. Do we need that kind of experience in the ranks of the county commissioners? Yes, we do.

I also like Art Jones, a good friend, in the race. Jones is a former Toledo City Councilman and worked for four years in the water department. Prior to his government service, Jones worked for 35 years in the VAN at AP parts. When you add Sylvania Township's Carol Contrada to the mix, you can easily see that voters have a strong field from which to choose this year.

Ben Krompak is a former student of mine and Michael Zychowicz is a local attorney. We need some debates to separate these five candidates.

The field is also getting crowded for the federal judgeship being vacated by Judge Carr who is moving to senior status thereby taking on a limited workload.

Ban Konop is said to want it and may have the backing of the publisher of The Blade. Judge Jack Puffenberger, a probate judge, also wants it badly.

Common Pleas Court Judges Stacy Cook and Gary Cook have quickly rounded up support from area labor unions. Some in the black community are supporting Neema Bell, a local attorney and partner in the law firm of Shumaker, Loop & Kendrick.

Whom do you support? Did you get on the phone and tell Senator Sherrod Brown?

HEALTH AWARENESS

Lawsuits Claim Denture Cream Linked To Illness

A debilitating medical condition is taking a devastating bite out of the lives of many denture wearers.

The condition is a type of nerve damage called neuropathy--a tingling and weakness in the arms and legs. It may also develop into complete loss of sensation and make walking or standing nearly impossible.

Recent medical studies have linked zinc found in common over-the-counter denture creams to this devastating condition.

Zinc is a mineral found in many foods, including shellfish, meat, beans and cereals. It is also sold in supplement form. It is required by the body to help wounds heal, to keep the immune system functioning properly and to help maintain proper sense of taste and smell. When used as an ingredient in denture products, zinc can help dentures adhere to the users' gums.

Too much zinc, however, can cause nausea, abdominal cramps and diarrhea. Chronic ingestion of high doses can result in copper deficiency, which can lead to serious neurological disease.

While the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance for zinc is 11 mg for men and 8 mg for women, denture adhesives, such as Super Poligrip and Fixodent, can contain 17-38 mg of zinc per gram of adhesive.

Recently, a lawsuit was filed against a well-known denture cream manufacturer claiming that the zinc in the adhesive was responsible for a 64-year-old man's paralysis and ultimate death due to respiratory failure. According to the family's attorney, Ed Blizzard, this may be the first case of "denture death" in the U.S.

On February 18, GlaxoSmith-Kline, maker of Poligrip and Super Poligrip, announced it would remove the zinc from its denture adhesives.

The law firm of Blizard, McCarthy & Nabers recently launched a Web site www.denturecreamjustice.com -to provide information about the condition and recourse that injured consumers can pursue.

To learn more, visit the Web site or call (866) 941-1947.

AKA's Celebrate Founders' Day and 102 Years of Service

Special to The Truth

On Sunday, February 28, 2010 Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. celebrated its 102 years founding at Brandywine Country Club. This event was open to the public and hosted by the three local chapters of the nation's first African American Greek-letter organization for college educated women. Undergraduate chapters at Bowling Green State University and the University of Toledo, and graduate chapter of Zeta Alpha Omega welcomed 200 guests and members to join this celebration whose theme was "Sustaining the Vision: A Celebration of our Founders".

Founded on the campus of Howard University in 1908, this small group of 16 women has grown to a membership of more than 250,000 college-educated women affiliated with undergraduate and alumna chapters worldwide. The credo of "service to all mankind" guides the sorority in its programs which centers on significant issues of the black family, communities, economics, health, entrepreneurship, technology, and the arts.

The guest speaker was Jala Anderson, former Channel 13 Action News anchor. Jala spoke of her great love for the Toledo community and how she welcomed the opportunity to return and share her incredible journey since she left the area. She was married in Toledo and left for a new job in North Carolina. Within a three year period she lost her job with that local TV station, moved back to her hometown of Chicago, secured a position with a pharmaceutical company was downsized and most devastating was her husband was killed in a car accident. Jala spoke of how she was changed by these three events and her faith and trust in God and her grandmother's love and encouragement sustained her and helped make her a stronger and better person today. She has written a book about her journey which will be released this year. Last year Abbott Laboratories recognized her diverse talents and recruited her to become their Global Field Sales Trainer. She is still active in community service and gives motivational speeches to youth, civic, and church groups. Also a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, she was eager to return to be the Founders Day speaker and introduce her new 4 month-old baby girl, Phoenix Rose to her sisters and guests.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority also recognized three local agencies for their services to the community. Covenant Youth Development, The Firm, and the Genesis Project all received contributions and certificates for their efforts to make life better for their specific populations.

Entertainment was provided by sorority members Bertha Peyton who provided the musical prelude. Mary Hayes sang Lift Every Voice and Sing and Gabrielle Hill astounded everyone with her professional classical solos. Rosalyn Cooper danced her interpretation of Alecia Keys "Superwoman". Mayor Michael Bell delivered greetings from the city.

Not only sorority members were recognized for their contributions as charter members, golden members, life members, silver stars, past presidents, regional and national officers. Local organizations were also acknowledged and thanked for their support. Marie L. Bush, chairperson for this event stated "We wanted the community to share in our celebration and we thank you for coming".

Mistress of ceremony was Kimberly Caldwell and Clara Petty is the graduate chapter president.

Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. Zeta Xi Zeta Chapter Holds 2010 Finer Womanhood Scholarship Breakfast

Sojourner's Truth Staff

The Zeta Xi Zeta Chapter of the Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. held its 2010 Finer Womanhood Scholarship Breakfast on March 20 in the Mt. Vernon Room at Parkway Place as dozens of sorors and guests gathered to celebrate this year's theme: "Inspiring Our Community to Dream."

Among the highlights of the morning were portraits of Zeta Phi Beta success stories presented by the chapter members, the presentation of the annual scholarship, the keynote address by Min. Sherri Galloway and the award for Zeta of the Year to Athelene Harrison.

"I am Freddie Henderson ... pioneer for African-American travelers who opened the first black-owned travel agency in 1955," said Celeste Burgess during her spirited portrait of the trail-blazing Zeta soror who, in 1964, planned Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s trip to Oslo, Norway to receive the Nobel Peace Prize. Henderson was honored herself to travel with King to the ceremony and sit with his party.

Chapter member Kimberly Awls presented her portrayal of Clara McLaughlin who, in 1979, received an FCC license and became the first African-American woman to purchase a television station - Longview, TX - and in 2002 bought the Florida

Star Newspaper in Jacksonville, FL.

"I knew when I was young I wanted to do something in the media," said Awls as her McLaughlin alter-ego. McLaughlin attended Howard University and became editor-in-chief of the yearbook staff and earned her MBA from Prairie View A & M University.

Soror Monique Gayle followed those remarks with her portrait of Yolanda Webb, a Detroit native and Tennessee State University graduate who started a cosmetics business in 2003 - E'l'on Cosmetics - whose mission is to help women see the beauty they have within.

After breakfast was served, the audience was treated to the keynote address by Galloway, who has lived her life by the idea of "embellishing yourself in the possibilities of life."

An associate minister at Rhema Word Christian Fellowship Church, Galloway formed the Christian Walk Ministry in 2001 to revive and empower those in need through spiritual counseling, community resource referrals and financial advising.

Galloway also has started a company, Strictly Business, a notary and tax preparation group that provides services for more than 150 clients in the Toledo area and across the nation.

BreAnna Allen was the scholarship recipient. Allen, a senior at Rogers High School is a member of clubs and organizations such as the Daughters of Promise, Student Council and Project Life. She is active in community service projects and the school's drama club.

Allen will be attending The University of Toledo where she plans to major in chemistry and hopes to be a dentist.

Athelene Harrison was named Zeta of the Year. A native of Morrilton, Arkansas, Harrison earned her bachelor of science degree from Philander Smith College in Little Rock and a master's degree from UT. She is a retired elementary school teacher and computer specialist with the Toledo Public Schools.

In 2000, Harrison and her six sisters started a business to mass produce a family Cha-Cha recipe - Florence's Home Style - named for the sister's mother who had passed the recipe on to their generation.

Florence's Home Style has flourished and can be found in select specialty grocery stores and online at Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc was formed in 1920 by five female students - the Five Pearls - at Howard University to address societal mores, ills, prejudices, poverty and health concerns. There are now hundreds of chapters around the world and the sorority's national and local programs include endowment of its National Educational Foundation, community outreach services and support of multiple affiliate organizations.

The Zeta Xi Zeta Chapter's Finer Womanhood Committee included Chairman Laurie Sharp, members J'Vann Winfield, Christian Young, Celeste Burgess and Kelli Williams. Jamilah Jones is the chapter's president.
