“Red Tails honors African-American members of our armed forces in a way no other major motion picture ever has.”
Fresh Perspectives

We cannot silence the voices that we do not like hearing. We can, however, do everything in our power to make certain that other voices are heard.

-Deborah Prothrow-Stith

This year’s 11th annual Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Unity Celebration held last week at The University of Toledo’s Savage Arena was anything but the sterile, lifeless and obligatory ceremony that normally takes place at public observances for the iconic civil rights martyr.

Hari Jones, curator for the African-American Civil War Museum in Washington, D.C., gave arguably the most dynamic and eloquent keynote address heard in the event’s 11-year local history.

Yet, the highlight was the fresh creativity and electrifying freedom of self-expression flowing through the youthful voices of the new Toledo Combined Youth Choir, rap artist Brieyon McBride and songwriter/singer Pedi McFly. All which added a new flavor to the normally predictable rite.

At a time when too many of our children are dying too soon from homicide, suicide and abuse or suffering the spiritual death of depression, hopelessness, drug use and school dropout, I left the festivities both encouraged and energized.

Despite such slogans as “it’s all about the children,” our actions indicate that young people are not a priority. Instead, the old saying “children are to be seen and not heard” has penetrated deep into our psyche. And once we are no longer young ourselves, we refuse to listen to or see the world through the eyes of young people. Rather, we mistakenly feel that silencing youth somehow makes their perspective illegitimate.

Do they sometimes challenge traditional opinions? Yes.
Do they see the world differently than adults? Yes.

However, we stifle their creativity, sometimes as early as preschool, by forcing adult-focused outcomes upon them, teaching to tests and being excessively critical or critiquing youth as if our interpretations are the ONLY correct ones. No wonder children often attempt to cover their inner fears with the false mask of a hard exterior or critiquing youth as if our interpretations are the ONLY correct ones.

So, to see young people energetically stepping up to the mike and strutting their floetry and harmonies or speaking their minds and expressing themselves in creative ways, not only brought a fresh perspective to what had become a threadbare normality.

The phrase “it takes a village to raise a child” is more than a cliché. As Homer Ashby (2003) stated, the physical and psychological loss of children in the African-American community requires more than the nuclear family to provide the nurture, care and protection to help youth survive, arrive at adulthood and reach their youthful potential.

What can the community do to keep the fresh fires burning and ensure that this youthful potential is realized?

The phrase “it takes a village to raise a child” is more than a cliché. As Homer Ashby (2003) stated, the physical and psychological loss of children in the African-American community requires more than the nuclear family to provide the nurture, care and protection to help youth survive, arrive at adulthood and reach their potential.

The phrase “it takes a village to raise a child” is more than a cliché. As Homer Ashby (2003) stated, the physical and psychological loss of children in the African-American community requires more than the nuclear family to provide the nurture, care and protection to help youth survive, arrive at adulthood and reach their potential.

Since African-American children are so vulnerable to the death-dealing consequences of the “new black poverty,” the responsibility falls upon the black community to adopt the children around them whether they come from a poverty-stricken single-parent household or a stable home with an intact nuclear unit.

By adoption, I refer to the informal surrogate model of the past where the “extended” black community undertook responsibility to look out for and to look after the interests of the children around us.

That system, of which author Nathan McCall (1994) described, “It seemed that everybody was so busy and bent on making sure we didn’t get away with anything. It was only years later, when black communities started falling apart, that I understood the hidden blessings. It had built-in mechanisms for reinforcing values and trying to prevent us from becoming the hellions some of us turned out to be.”

Certainly the black church can provide this protection and guidance even though black youth who are at greater risk are outside the walls of the church. The community also has to find a way to fund more formal mentoring and rites of passage programming.

But taking a special interest in, watching out for and becoming a source of encouragement for those children who are near or come into contact with us, is something we each can do.

Most importantly, it helps to understand that sometimes the source of youthful rebellion can be traced back to the lack of input, inclusion and the opportunity for young people to find their own voice.

For when young people are allowed the space to play a significant role and to speak in their own language, they themselves are likely to respond as did the Toledo Combined Youth Choir:

Hold on my brother don’t give up, hold on my sister just look up;
There is a master plan in store for you, if you just make it through.
You ain’t seen nothing yet. The best is yet to come.
Do you recognize the above partial quote? It is from the Bible and it is contextually referenced at Matthew 25:40.

The context is Jesus teaching and preaching regarding being in proper relationship to God and what are the visible derivatives of that obedient relationship.

Wanting to drive home the impact that there is no such thing as a faceless person or pain that is not palpably perceived or hunger that is not hurting or being naked without being exposed or being thirsty without feeling famished, Jesus cuts to the quick.

He put his face on the face of the poor, hungry, naked, homeless and those in prison; and then cogently informed his followers that when they neglect to aid and assist the above when they have opportunity to do so, they are doing the same as if it were Jesus who was languishing in the cardboard box sitting on top of the heating grate.

And, that they are snatching a plate of food from him while he stands in a soup line.

And, that they are neglecting him while he atrophies in a prison with no comfort or solace.

And, that they are throwing him out in the cold with nary a thought as to whether or not his threadbare clothing is sufficient for the blowing winds.

Now, bring those analogies full circle and hear the shrill arguments of those who are running for political office and who label themselves “Christian” Republicans.

Newt Gingrich, a newly converted Catholic, continues to demonize black people as if somehow they have a tail and no common sense when he uses racial rhetoric to castigate and pillory those whom are under-served or have no political or economic shelter by which to ride out his blusterly bombastic vitriol.

In the days of yonder, Newt would have been the kindly and indulgent plantation owner but nonetheless would have instantly rendered 40 lashes minus one for any insolence coming from any of his slave (chattel) property.

Sarah Palin chimed in with the disingenuous thought that if she were a voter in South Carolina, she would endorse and counter-sign the intellectual gibberish that Newt is fond of promulgating.

Ron Paul’s prior newsletters (which he now conveniently disavows) speak of black people as criminals and thugs and welfare queens and his purported contempt of Martin Luther King Jr. is mean and dispiriting.

Mitt Romney, with an arrogance born of privilege and pride, suffers lightly those who would challenge him on the remarks that if you are not enthused about capitalism and its blessings then you have a problem.

Mitt Romney, a professing Mormon, has yet to refute the beliefs of his church, which belittle and denigrates people of color and they being deemed an accursed lot.

Ron Santorum sniffingly mocks black people when he belittles their current economic status and blames them for not being more economically advanced.

Rick Perry, the braggadocio Texan with the “Oops” swagger of recent debate fame, chose not to intervene by bringing any of his cohorts to account-ability for their inane racial or racially tinged comments.

But yet. In all of the above personalities, they all claim to have a “Christian” or a religious experience with Jesus or with God.

They all give the expected religious lip service but they are woefully lacking in understanding and much less undertaking the sun-dry disciplines of doing servant hood, charity or justice to the least of these.

They all play the religious card and utter the obligatory statements of knowing the Christ and how this is a “Christian” nation under God.

If Christ were walking in America today, these Republicans would call him an anti-capitalist, a troublemaker and they would carp and complain because of his identification with the poor and outcasts of society.

Can anyone with any certitude state that any of the above Republican candidates would warmly embrace poor people or down trodden people or those of a different economic strata other than their own?

It does not seem like it. What is does seem however is that some of the current corpus of Republican candidates are still throwing “red racial meat” to their base and are using known “code words” to communicate with that base that they still know how to kick black butt and that “states rights” (jargon for: let us alone. We know how to deal with “our” Negroes) is still near and dear to their hearts.

Only recently, Ann Coulter, the female version of Newt Gingrich but on steroids, stated that, “our” black people (black Republicans) are better than your black people (referring to the blacks who call themselves Democrats).

Yes, there is a vestige with some of the visible Republican talking heads that they denigrate blacks at every opportune time (Rush Limbaugh) or they assert ownership rights over them (Ann Coulter) or as Newt and Mitt do, they simply excoriate them or count them as marginal Americans who serve a food stamp President!

And they wonder why they cannot recruit black people to the grand old’ party of the elephant!

Former Mayors Out of Line in Attacking Successor

The old adage that “those who can’t do, teach” seems wholly appropriate for these two former mayors. It would seem that Carty Finkbeiner, in particular, who micro-managed everything during his tenure, should have been the well aware of the deficiencies in his administration.

To snipe at the decisions made to resolve concerns that he missed appears to be nothing but sour grapes. Carty, whose behavior as mayor made Toledo a punchline on the late night talk shows, is the one who needs to behave not simply as a man but as an adult.

The interior of the Hollywood Casino Toledo is about 85 percent complete, according to General Manager Richard St. Jean, and the opening that is anticipated for the early spring has been delayed due to licensing issues, but the management team is upbeat that everything will come together in a timely manner.

Last week, the news media were invited to tour the facility and get a look at the casino floor and the five restaurants and bars that will soon open to the public.

The casino, which will provide 1,200 full and part-time jobs, is being constructed on 44 acres along the Maumee River and will enclose 290,000 square feet of space. There will be 2,620 gaming positions and 2,000 electronic machines, along with poker, blackjack, roulette and craps tables.

Mike Galle, assistant general manager, noted that the casino will have entertainment every night of the week. And as the facility is not quite ready to go, neither is the staff. There are still open positions and training is ongoing at a number of sites. Ninety percent of the jobs are expected to be filled by local residents, said Galle, who was not at all concerned with the fact that experienced casino workers are few and far between in the northwest Ohio area.

The casino is looking for those with the right attitude, he said. “We can teach you to deal cards.”

“We need to fix up abandoned properties as quickly as possible, so families can turn them back into homes again.”

Unfortunately, some of these properties have deteriorated beyond repair,” said Kaptur. The city of Toledo has identified a list of approximately 700 properties that need to be demolished. In addition, there are an estimated 70,000 homes across Ohio which also must be demolished. “It is important to find appropriate uses for these sites as quickly as possible,” said Kaptur. “We must do more to help our region get back on its feet and move beyond this crisis that Wall Street created.”

TOLEDO EXCEL was established in 1988 to help groups of students under-represented in higher education, including African, Appalachian, Asian, Hispanic and Native Americans, for success in college. Through services such as summer institutes, academic retreat weekends, campus visits and guidance through the admission process, students increase their self-esteem, cultural awareness and civic involvement.

The Office of Excel is a hub of academic programs, activities and services that reach students in the eighth grade through high school graduation and beyond. These programs include: TOLEDO EXCEL, Upward Bound, and Student Support Services. The thirty-six member UT Joint Committee includes representatives from The University of Toledo, Toledo Public and Parochial schools and civic and community leaders from the city of Toledo. The mission of the committee is to bring together people in the Toledo community interested in the education of underrepresented youth. The UT Joint Committee also serves as an advisory board and support system for TOLEDO EXCEL.
Obituary: Etta James

James’s signature track At Last was sung at President Obama’s inauguration. Etta James, who has died at the age of 73, had a rich, contralto voice that breathed life into a host of musical genres, from blues to jazz, R&B to soul.

Many top performers cited her as a huge influence on their careers, but she had to wait 40 years before winning major recognition from the music industry.

She began singing in the 1950s. Battled substance abuse for the best part of a decade, then bounced back to win a string of awards and bring her music to a new audience.

Jamesetta Hawkins was born in Los Angeles on 25 Jan 1938, the illegitimate daughter of a 14-year-old African-American girl and a white father whom James never met.

In her autobiography, James says she was convinced that her father was Minnesota Fats, the famous pool hustler but, “I didn’t have the courage, or means, to confront him”. Like many black artists of the time she began singing gospel in a church choir in Los Angeles before she went to live with relatives in San Francisco.

She got together with two other girls to form a group which was auditioned by the late legendary band leader and impresario, Johnny Otis. Otis rearranged her first name and her vocal group became, The Peaches. Their first record, Roll With Me Henry, topped the R&B charts in 1955 although some radio stations objected to the suggestive title.

The Peaches disappeared from the scene and James set out on a solo career, scoring some minor hits and experimenting with various musical styles including rock ‘n’ roll.

James signed for the legendary Chess Records in 1960. In 1960 she signed to the legendary Chess Records where the boss, Leonard Chess, decided James would find success as a ballad singer.

In 1961 she released the album, At Last, which featured a string of her previous R&B hits.

The title track, a cover of a 1941 number one performed by Glenn Miller, was to become her signature tune, much played at weddings because of the sweet orchestral arrangement.

In all, she achieved no fewer than 10 chart hits between 1961 and 1963. Despite her success with ballads, James did not neglect the rougher edge of her voice, recording the blues standard, Call My Name, in 1966.

In 1967 she moved to Fame Studios in Alabama where she wrote and recorded one of her most beautiful, and best-known songs, I’d Rather Go Blind. Despite her success, she found it difficult to break out of the black music market and it was a British blues band, Chicken Shack - fronted by Christine Perfect - that was a showcase for a new, more raunchy style of singing.

In 1994 the music industry awarded her her first Grammy for a collection of Billie Holiday songs, Mystery Lady. Her warts and all autobiography, A Rage to Survive, was published in 1998.

2001’s Matriarch of the Blues, was critically acclaimed, with Rolling Stone magazine’s reviewer saying that she had reclaimed her throne, and during anyone to knock her off.

James continued to perform in later years, despite health problems. And still the awards came. A Grammy Lifetime Achievement award in 2003, was followed by another Grammy in 2004 for the album, Let’s Roll and yet another in 2005, for Blues to the Bone.

But while she had beaten the drugs, her later career was dominated by struggles with her weight which, at one time had reached around 378 pounds. For several years she could only appear on stage in a wheelchair.

Eventually she underwent a gastric bypass procedure and lost nearly 196 pounds. In 2009 she famously clashed with the singer, Beyoncé, who performed James’s most famous song, “At Last,” during the ball to celebrate Barack Obama’s inauguration as US President.

“She has no business up there, singing up there on a big ol’ president day, gonna be singing my song that I’ve been singing forever,” said James.

As she aged her voice gained a rougher edge but she never lost the power to astound her adoring audiences.

“I’m so happy I am alive,” she said in a 2003 interview. “I’ve gone through so much in my life, I should have been dead a long time ago. I am the happiest I have been.”

Red Tails

There are so many ways to approach a review of this film that I couldn’t decide on one way, so I approached it from every way that made sense to me.

Red Tails As A War Film
Blood and guts, massive pyrotechnics and ear-piercing sound are hallmarks of most movies in this genre. As with most things that are overused, much of these elements become stale and predictable over time.

When that happens, you end up with spoofs like Ben Stiller’s Tropic Thunder. Red Tails keeps the gore in a believable context.

There’s enough blood, wounds and injury to keep in mind that this is World War II but it’s not overly dramatic and audiences should appreciate being spared that sensationalist approach.

Red Tails As A Black Film
The words “black film” or “black movie” can mean at least two things. Either a film starring and centered around black people, or a film involving topics of racial identity and hardship faced by black people.

Still, this will be regarded as a black film.

One we can be proud of. George Lucas has said in the media that he wasn’t aiming to focus on the racism, but to tell the tale from the standpoint of heroism. Which, I must admit… not many black films accomplish these days.

But aside from the tale, a black film must have credible black talent.

Can I be honest with y’all? Look, I just plain don’t like Cuba Gooding Jr. on screen. It’s nothing personal. I’m sure he is a great human being and his accomplishments are well earned. But aside from Boyz In The Hood, black cinema has not seen any significant contribution from him. I just don’t care for his acting.

He’s like our version of Leonardo DiCaprio. Both are amazingly successful, both usually pick good roles and both are as bland as dollar store sponge cake.

His role as Major Stance only feels natural as the movie progresses. The less central his character becomes, the easier it is to accept.

Terrence Howard is the other half of the star power one-two punch, and he brings a validity and presence to the role of Col. Bullard that only he could bring. Nate Parker does his thing. Tristan Wilds does his thing.

But how in the hell Ne-yo and Method Man ended up in this film, I will never know. I mean really, whomakes these decisions?

A part of me is happy to see Mith in such a pivotal role for his career.

But the other part is thinking how this is such a pivotal film overall, and we really need qualified actors on deck.

Some of the best acting you’ve ever seen in your life, however, is delivered via the portrayal of Tuskegee Airman Joe “Lightning” Little by one David Oyelowo.

That’s theatre training right there, ladies and gentlemen.

That’s not someone with two dozen b movies under the belt, cutting his teeth in Hollywood’s underbelly while hoping to do the right favor to earn his next role.

You can feel the intensity he brings to his character.

His acting is the anchor for this entire film. Which brings me to my next point.

Red Tails As A Buddy Film
To have multiple lead roles in a film is no easy task to achieve.

In the buddy movie genre, there’s always push and pull involving the extremes of one person’s persona in relation to another who just happens to be a close friend.

Think of any film that centers around two guys who are best friends.

What goes on between them is just as important as the setting and adventure they find themselves in.

The bonds of friendship between “Lightning” and “Easy” help make Red Tails a lasting cinematic experience.

I know I felt that way, especially when “Lightning” and “Easy” started bickering back and forth.

Well, Boondocks creator Aaron McGruder was brought in to finish the screenplay and offer his takes as final production of Red Tails wrapped.

If you get a chance, watch an episode of the Boondocks first season entitled “Wingmen.” You’ll see why this is relevant.

Overall, the powerful acting of a few made up for the ho-hum acting of others. The action was worth the money of the movie price, the tale was interesting and it had enough historical context to teach but still felt fresh enough for all audiences to enjoy.

It honors African-Amercian members of our armed forces in a way no other major motion picture ever has.

It also has proven to be a source of dignity and unity for moviegoers of all ages and races. This is definitely one you want to own one day, for many reasons.

The true grade for Red Tails is A–.
On Friday, January 27th, 20 North Gallery will open Black History Month 2012: Legacy – Peggy Grant’s 35th Annual Exhibit. The show will continue through Saturday, March 10, 2012. The exhibition was founded by Peggy Grant (current Art Director of 20 North Gallery) in 1977, shortly after Congress enacted legislation recognizing the month of February as Black History Month in the United States.

Since then, the show has been exhibited throughout various locations in the Toledo community and now, for 17 years, is proudly presented by 20 North Gallery. This event has become an integral part of Toledo’s Black History Month celebrations—and in recognizing the contributions and accomplishments of prominent African-American artists and leaders in our community.

Each year’s exhibit showcases artwork of the best black artists of our region, as well as many nationally recognized artists. In addition, 20 North Gallery facilitates school visits and participatory workshops given by visiting artists in local elementary and secondary schools.

Related events during the run of this exhibit have included live poetry readings at 20 North Gallery featuring African-American poets, storytelling, and live musical performances. The exhibit and outreach are made possible by the lifetime of support paid to this groundbreaking exhibition by its founder, Peggy Grant.

Peggy Grant states, “Growing up in America’s South, the way of life I witnessed was greatly divided by the social and racial barriers that were in place at the time. When I came to the Toledo-area pursuing my art career, I was astounded by the opportunities to make friends with people of all races and cultures. My mission since arriving in the Midwest has been to support Black artists in the Toledo Area who had not been previously recognized by the mainstream art culture.”

Since that time in the mid-1950s, Grant has actively promoted the work and professional careers of such noted artists as LeMaxie Glover, Marvin Vines and Wil Clay, among others. Her corporate curatorial work at Owen-Illinois provided a platform for many regional artists to exhibit their work in an international venue, giving greater recognition to African-American artists of our community. Displayed in Black History Month 2012: Legacy – Peggy Grant’s 35th Annual Exhibit will be the work of many celebrated Toledo-area artists, including: Aaron S. Bivins; Charles T. Gabriel, Jr.; Alice Grace; Ronald Jamison; Elizabeth V. Jordan; Marcus Nunn; Brenda Price; Robert E. Shorter; Ramon R. Tigges; Mack Walton; Warren and Yolanda Woodberry; as well as works by Wade Harrison of Atlanta, Georgia; John Wade III from Ft. Wayne, Indiana and paintings and original book illustrations by the late Wil Clay of Toledo.

20 North Gallery, exhibiting artists and Peggy Grant, will be welcoming friends and collectors at the free Opening Reception on Friday, January 27th, from 6 - 9p.m. Reception (Continued on Page 9)
The Galactic Adventures of Jaedyn

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

Author Andre Gaines refers to his 11-year-old niece Jaedyn as a “girly-girl,” but says he can’t remember a single Halloween when she’s wanted to dress up like a princess. “She’s always wanted to be a superhero,” Gaines said. “I remember one Halloween when my Mom called me upset because Jaedyn wanted to be Spider-Man. I thought it was awesome!”

While Gaines says his niece has a strong personality and isn’t afraid to speak her mind, he notices that for many children her age, speaking up is a unique challenge, especially for kids being bullied. “That’s where I got the idea to write a book.”

Gaines, a television writer and producer in Los Angeles, started thinking about the struggles of these bullied kids in contrast to his own spirited, strong-willed niece. “I thought it would be really cool if these kids had a superhero to defend them,” Gaines said. But he didn’t want a run-of-the-mill superhero. Instead, he wanted a champion for middle-grade readers who are consistently underrepresented on bookshelves. “I realized that there are lots of little girls out there who are starving to see images of themselves in the male-dominated superhero universe. It’s really a shame that there aren’t more adventure books for girls in the marketplace and even more so that few books in this category represent African-Americans.”

Featuring his niece as the fiery, precocious lead character, Gaines was motivated to inspire bullied kids and uplift the presence of African-American heroines in his first novel, The Galactic Adventures of Jaedyn G. (Parkside Press 2012) — a 128-page middle-grade novel that follows the title character on a journey of self-discovery from the schoolyard to the outer galaxy. In the novel, Jaedyn—a straight-forward, self-confident young girl with a talent for wrestling—leads a space alien named Zel to a place called Planet Bob on a mission to recover her stolen wrestling belt. Zel, a soft-hearted victim of bullying, becomes her friend and confidant, and together they discover that real superheroes come in all forms.

Gaines, who owns the animation studio Cinemation, said he got his entire family involved in the writing process, including his niece, his parents and his brother, Jay, who is Jaedyn’s father. “My parents Jimmy and Sharon Gaines were especially instrumental in shaping the story. My mom has always been an educator for years, and a Specialist in multicultural education administration and supervision,” Gaines said. “My brother, Jay, read over ten drafts of the manuscript and was really key in helping me iron out the plot points. He has an uncanny knack for solving story problems, and I often called him in the middle of the day for a fix.”

The most important feedback, however, came from Gaines’ niece Jaedyn, who unwrapped an advanced copy of the book on Christmas Day and says she read all 28 chapters in two days. “I’ve never seen a book like this about aliens and I really like seeing myself as a superhero. I like it even better than some of my favorite books like Diary of a Wimpy Kid and Spacehedz because it’s about a girl and not a boy,” said the 11-year-old, who is also an honor student at the Columbus Spanish Immersion Academy in Columbus, Ohio. “Everyone started circling around my teacher when she was reading the book. Then a friend of mine who bought the book asked me if she was going to get her ten dollars back because we’re friends and I told her no.”

Jaedyn said she liked everything about the book except one very important detail — “in The Galactic Adventures of Jaedyn G., the title character’s favorite color is purple, and her favorite color is actually neon green.”

Gaines is optimistic about the future of the middle-grade series. “I sent an advanced copy to a good friend and mentor of mine, author Tananarive Due, and she emailed me saying, ‘my son snatched it up right away, so it’s a hit!’” Gaines said. “I got the same reaction from several other friends who bought advanced copies for their nieces and nephews, which is very rewarding.”

While critical reviews for the novel have been strong, with more expected in the Spring, Gaines said he values customer reviews on Amazon.com the most. “My goal was to write something fun and hopefully empower young girls everywhere with a sense of self-determination and confidence in being who they are.”

The novel is currently available on Amazon.com and will be available to major booksellers everywhere through Ingram and Baker & Taylor on January 26, 2012.

Arts League of Michigan News
End Black History Month

Detroit, MI — During Black History Month of 2010, 29 year old film maker, Shukree Hassan Tilghman, began his crisscross journey throughout the U.S. to explore Black History Month. It seemed to be one man’s journey to end Black History Month, especially when people saw him and his sandwich board, not knowing that it was a tongue-in-cheek illusion. He instead focused on how Black History Month relates to education, commercialism, history and identity.

His campaign was both personally and intellectually driven. Tilghman, in part, focused on opening public discussions to uncover the pros and cons about the idea of ethnic heritage ‘months’. Since Black History Month is the shortest, he explored concepts such as separating Black History from American History and whether it denigrates the roles that Black people have played throughout American history. Not the least of the goals of the quest involved his need to resolve some of his own feelings about his identity and convictions.

The result of Tilghman’s efforts is a most insightful and sometimes humorous movie, ‘MORE THAN A MONTH’ which is really about what it means to be an American and to fight for one’s rightful place in the American landscape. ‘MORE THAN A MONTH’ WILL MAKE IT’S DETROIT DEBUT AT THE VIRGIL H. CARR CULTURAL ARTS CENTER, 311 EAST GRAND RIVER ON WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1 AT 6:30 P.M. The viewing is free and is the only local opportunity to see the movie and to meet Tilghman to learn more about what he learned and how the movie came together.

‘More Than A Month’ is co-sponsored by the Department of Africana Studies at Wayne State University, WDET Radio and the Trinity Film Coalition

The Arts League of Michigan is a non-profit, arts and culture organization that provides adults and children with opportunities to experience arts education and the performing arts. All classes and activities are held in the Virgil H. Carr Cultural Arts Center, 311 East Grand River

Letters from the Heart

FOURTH IN A SERIES: JIM

Their grief counselors helped me cope.

When my wife, Joan, died, my reaction was overwhelming. Pain I couldn’t imagine. Emotions I hadn’t experienced before. After searching for help, only one place had everything I needed – Hospice of Northwest Ohio and their bereavement programs. I was in groups with people who felt like I did, led by trained professionals who knew where we had been and where we were going. I was amazed at how effective these programs are.

Jim, 2007

New Library Publication Highlights Civil-Rights Struggle

“Miles to Go for Freedom: Segregation and Civil Rights in the Jim Crow Era” by Linda B. Osborne has been published by the Library of Congress and Abrams Books.

“Miles to Go for Freedom” tells the story of African-American young people and their families who lived through the “Jim Crow” years, when “separate but equal” laws supported discrimination against African Americans. The book spans the period beginning with legislation separating white and black people in the 1890s, through the Supreme Court decision in Plessy v. Ferguson condoning “separate but equal” public accommodations, and ending with the landmark case of Brown v. Board of Education, when the Supreme Court ruled racial segregation unconstitutional.

Drawing on the Library’s collection of photographs, interviews with people who lived the period and other primary sources, the book conveys the day-to-day experiences of black Americans across the country. The book chronicles the fight for opportunity and justice by individuals and organizations, such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), whose papers are housed in the Library of Congress. A timeline, bibliography, photographs, notes and an index help readers of all ages learn more about this critical period in American history.

“Miles to Go for Freedom” is a companion to Osborne’s critically acclaimed “Traveling the Freedom Road: From Slavery and the Civil War Through Reconstruction,” published in 2009 by the Library in association with Abrams Books. Osborne is the author of several books for children and adults on African-American history. She was formerly a senior writer and editor in the Library’s Publishing Office.

“Miles to Go for Freedom,” a 128-page hardback book with 90 color and black & white images, is available for $24.95 from the Library of Congress Shop (www.loc.gov/shop/) or by calling (888) 682-3557. It is also available in bookstores nationwide and online.

Founded in 1800, the Library of Congress is the nation’s oldest federal cultural institution. The Library seeks to spark imagination and creativity and to further human understanding and wisdom by providing access to knowledge through its magnificent collections, programs and exhibitions. Many of the Library’s rich resources can be accessed through its website at www.loc.gov.

Who is your favorite Superhero? Does he wear a cape and fly through the air? Or does he have sharp knives instead of claws so he can really mess up the Bad Guys? Or maybe your Superhero has long ears and a swishy tail, and did something quietly wonderful. In the book ‘Belle, the Last Mule at Gee’s Bend’ by Calvin Alexander Ramsey and Bettye Stroud, illustrated by John Holyfield, you’ll meet the hero who gently made history.

Alex was just killing time. His mother was doing some shopping at the Gee’s Bend General Store and though he wanted to go play, Alex was told to wait for her. And there he was, sitting on a bench, minding his mother and watching an old mule across the street, when an elderly woman sat down beside him.

Alex wondered aloud why the mule was allowed to just eat out of someone’s garden. Wasn’t the gardener mad about that?

The old woman smiled and began to tell Alex a story...

Once upon a time, everybody in Gee’s Bend was poor. Most people didn’t have cars because they couldn’t afford them. All they had were mules and wagons. Benders—that’s what they called themselves—used mules for just about everything.

That old mule eating out of the garden? Her name was Belle and she had been around a long time—ever since Dr. Martin Luther King visited Gee’s Bend back in 1965.

Dr. King had urged Benders to register for the vote, but white folks tried to stop them. Unafraid, Benders hitched up their mules, traveled a half a day to nearby Camden, and registered anyway.

Mules meant so much to Dr. King’s movement that when he was shot, someone called Gee’s Bend and asked if two Bender mules could pull Dr. King’s coffin through the streets of Atlanta. And one of those mules—a hero, to many—was eating collard greens out of that garden right across the street.

Sometimes when you’re little, big concepts are hard to grasp. For very young children, though, ‘Belle, the Last Mule at Gee’s Bend’ is a good start for understanding an important bit of history.

Authors Calvin Alexander Ramsey and Bettye Stroud tell this real-life story from an angle that children will love; partly because the storyteller is such a sweet character and partly because an animal is right in the middle of the tale (and what kid doesn’t love animals?). Smaller children will also enjoy artist John Holyfield’s accompanying illustrations, while older kids will appreciate the behind-the-scenes information at the back of the narrative.

Despite the grown-up story inside it, I was charmed by this children’s book and I think your youngster will be, too. For kids ages four-to-eight, when it’s time to learn a different angle on the Civil Rights story, ‘Belle, the Last Mule at Gee’s Bend’ is pretty super.

The ladies were dazzling in silver this year at the annual Top Ladies of Distinction Prayer Breakfast held at The Premiere on Heatherdowns Blvd. And this year’s theme was perfectly appropriate—“Be devoted to one another in love” (Romans 12:10)—for an organization that devotes its time and service in love throughout the community.

This year’s speaker was Mary Kelly, a lifetime member of Indiana Avenue Missionary Baptist Church and a devotional leader. The morning’s event was opened by Denise Cardwell, who introduced the Top Teens and the Lords and by Debra Jelks who introduced those on the dias.

The Top Ladies’ President Mary McKinley Reed welcomed the guests in attendance. Nathaniel Gurley was on hand with a musical selection.

Top Ladies is a national professional humanitarian organization that was incorporated in Texas in 1964. The group’s programs focus on working with teens (Top Teens of America), senior citizens, community beautification, the status of women and community partnership. The Toledo chapter of Top Ladies was organized in 1984 by founder Ann Battles at Robinson Junior High School (now Robinson Elementary School).
