We Stand With EOPA

An Open Letter to Toledo

Recent statements by the local media, Lucas County Commissioner Pete Gerken, a handful of other elected officials and city leaders paint an inaccurate picture of our community’s largest grassroots agency and family service-provider, the Economic Opportunity Planning Association of Greater Toledo (EOPA).

For nearly five decades, EOPA has been a vital resource to tens of thousands of youth and households throughout Lucas County, particularly those in the central city.

With regard to its federally funded Head Start program alone, EOPA has successfully prepared almost 70,000 preschool children for kindergarten.

EOPA’s programs have lessened the impact of poverty and created opportunities for sustained self-sufficiency among more than 100,000 families. Those served annually through EOPA initiatives include:

- Almost 30,000 Northwest Ohio families in the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program
- Over 2,000 children, ages 3-5, enrolled in Toledo Head Start
- Over 2,000 seniors citizens in the resource-brokering/assistance program
- Over 400 ex-offenders seeking re-entry to the workforce and education systems

Additionally, EOPA employs approximately 350 full-time staff members at a time in our history when organizations serving the poor are losing the funding battle to larger, more politically supported entities. Toledo is the newest funding battlefield based upon TPS, Toledo Community Foundation, University of Toledo and the United Way of Greater Toledo’s newly-found interest in the Head Start Program and the approximate $14 million federal dollars it brings.

What if, instead of having private meetings, Toledo Public Schools, Toledo Community Foundation, United Way of Greater Toledo and the University of Toledo which combined have access to approximately $2 billion dollars annually, joined with EOPA in fervent discussions and implementation strategies for programs to fight for the plight of the underserved and educating the poorest of the poor rather than eliminating EOPA Head Start and its history of service from the equation? Doesn’t 48 years of service count for something?

If EOPA is cast aside and discarded as one of the pillars of the central city social service organizations, will there be any other organizations in the central city to fill in the gap or take on the charge that EOPA has carried on valiantly for years? The Frederick Douglas Center is barely breathing, the Urban League of Greater Toledo is on life-support, and countless other central city programs that once provided for poor underserved minority communities now read “R.I.P.”

Now the sole survivor, EOPA, is under attack from the same organizations and politicians who routinely come through our community when they need our support but consistently stand idle while countless central city social service agencies are collapsing. If it is truly about the children and not dollars, and we teach our children that there is power in unity, then why can’t we work towards strengthening EOPA Head Start?

A partnership, not a competition, between EOPA and another organization that is genuinely committed to championing for poor and underserved communities is the best option for our children.

EOPA Head Start Success Stories from the Parents:

“Head Start did a wonderful job developing our child’s language skills”

“Head Start helped us get the medical screening for our children”

“Her rhyming word and color recognition have improved”

“He loves to read and wants me to read to him”

“The staff really worked with me, a single mom”

Toledo NAACP asks you to join us in supporting EOPA’s continued leadership of Head Start and other social service initiatives. Tell the Department of Health and Human Services that you stand with EOPA by calling (202) 205-5445, or sign your name at the end of this letter and mail it to: Health and Human Services, 200 Independence Avenue, S.W., Washington, D.C. 20201.

The fight is about Toledo Pub lic Schools (TPS) trying to snatch up the federal funds that EOPA has and redirect those funds and the hundreds of jobs into their coffers. The combatants are wide-eyed with fear and trepidation against the other because there is a lot at stake. If the EOPA programs cannot remain in the hands of the current caretakers, many, many people will be out of a job since TPS has no vested interest in having those same workers work for TPS doing the same tasks. If EOPA wins the day and can continue to be the sole provider for early childhood education, their image may be tarnished if it is shown that their work product...the kids who graduate...are just doing, “so-so” with the advantaged kids and thus these EOPA programs may be considered overvalued, under evaluated and consequently, over funded by tax-payer money. If objective and quantifiable research can empirically state that the majority of EOPA kids do receive good and lasting educational benefits, then EOPA needs to continue without TPS (or anyone else) trying to elbow in on the jobs and the money. However, if such research shows that Shantae and Demarcus are not benefiting from these educational enrichment programs, changes are in order. But the change should not be via TPS because it is a glaring public fact that the record of TPS in educating kids is notoriously poor as evidenced by years and years of the public school system being in academic watch or even academic emergency. TPS is not the proper vehicle by which they can tout their educational prowess to take over the tasks of EOPA. That is a laugh-a-minute joke! TPS should not be seen as anyone’s educational savior with their dismal record of test scores and now they want to perpetuate their abysmal record on even younger kids? Talking about selling a phony bill of goods! If TPS is hard up for money (which they are) they need to take the idea that I have been pushing for years and that is to recoup the $5800.00 per student that is lost each school year due to their teachers, administrators, principals and employees opting out of the public school system when they place their kids in private and parochial schools. What brazen hypocrisies. They want to tout how good a TPS degree is but yet hundreds of white kids go elsewhere because their parents, who are employed by TPS, do not trust a TPS degree; and do not trust their own colleagues to educate their kids. Wow...wow...wow! And these are the same characters that want to vamp on hundreds of more poor and low-income kids with their faulty educational disciplines. EOPA needs to rally the black community around this vital issue and press the battle on and for them to realize that TPS is not their buddy nor are the school board members who champion this funding grab. This is a naked money grab by TPS nothing more...nothing less. TPS needs to get their financial crumbling educational house in order before they begin to greedily grab the crust of bread off the plate of someone else. Power never accedes without a struggle! EOPA...fight the fight! Contact Lafe Tolliver at tolliver@lums.com

Toledo Head Start Proposal Must be a Community Based Effort

It is in the best interest of the citizens of Lucas County that the application to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Head Start Program be as broadly community based as possible.

Over the last few weeks I have continued to work together with the Mayor, the University of Toledo, TPS, EOPA and others to bring all parties together to partner on a strong and effective proposal from the community, taking advantage of the strengths of key agencies and educational institutions.

This must be a community effort and not a battle over control. Commissioner Gerken urges the community to work collaboratively through this very important decision.

Pete Gerken, President Lucas County Board of Commissioners

Letters from the Heart

Their grief counselors helped me cope.

When my wife, Joan, died, my reaction was overwhelming. Pain I couldn’t imagine. Emotions I hadn’t experienced before. After searching for help, only one place had everything I needed – Hospice of Northwest Ohio and their bereavement programs. I was in groups with people who felt like I did, led by trained professionals who knew where we had been and where we were going. I was amazed at how effective these programs are.

Jim, 2007

For 30 years, families have been writing to Hospice of Northwest Ohio to express their thanks for support before, during and after the loss of a loved one. Our bereavement programs help each person work through grief in a way that’s right for them.

EOPA’s Head Start Program Up for Bids – And the Line Is Getting Long

By Fletcher Word
Sojourner’s Truth Editor

EOPA’s Head Start Program, operated by the Economic Opportunity Planning Association (EOPA), serves children's growth and development in Lucas County. However, recent decisions by HHS have called into question the sustainability of the program.

In December 2011, HHS announced that 132 agencies would be required to compete for future funding. This comes after HHS amended the Head Start Act in December 2007, requiring periodic review and a process for proposed seven conditions that would trigger the grant for competing bids. These conditions include: financial management issues; failure to establish school readiness goals; failure to meet minimum thresholds on CLASS (long-term entitlement care program); revocation of a license to operate a center or program; suspension of federal funds or a material weakness or failure to function as a going concern.

EOPA has run Head Start programs in Lucas County for decades. In December 2011, HHS announced that 132 agencies will be awarded grants for a five-year period and that those that funded agencies must now re-apply for funding due to perceived deficiencies in services delivered.

In December 2007, the Improving Head Start School Readiness Act amended the Head Start Act to order HHS to take a more critical look at Head Start programs and grants. Head Start grantees must submit periodic reports, and the program is now subject to periodic review and proposed severance that would indicate that an agency was not delivering high-quality service and thereby trigger the grant for competing bids. Those conditions are: financial management issues; failure to establish school readiness goals; failure to meet minimum thresholds on CLASS (long-term entitlement care program); revocation of a license to operate a center or program; suspension of federal funds or a material weakness or failure to function as a going concern.

EOPA has run Head Start programs in Lucas County for decades. The EOPA has run Head Start programs for decades. EOPA began in the 1960’s as part of the Johnson administration’s Model Cities Program and currently has an operating budget of approximately $19.5 million. Head Start funds from HHS account for almost $13 million of that total.

With those funds, EOPA enrolls 2,043 three-to five-year-olds per year in an effort to achieve the Head Start mission as recently defined by the Act of 2007 of “prom[oting] the school readiness of low-income children by enhancing their cognitive, social and emotional development in a learning environment that supports children’s growth in language, literacy, mathematics, science, social and emotional functioning, creative arts, physical skills and approaches to learning ...” However, in addition to the audit on the program by HHS and the requirement to re-bid the grant comes recent news of an evaluation of the progress of the young graduates of the local program. Early this school year, Toledo Public Schools Assistant Superintendent Romules Durant, Ed.D, and a former Head Start board member, compiled research from the Kindergarten Readiness Assessment – Literacy (KRAL) tests which showed that Head Start graduates' readiness for kindergarten was not significantly different from their counterparts who had not attended Head Start.

The statistics Durant compiled compared Head Start students to all other kindergartners in TPS, those at Title I schools (free and reduced lunch eligible) and to those at Race to The Top schools – the five lowest performing central city schools. That information was compiled before HHS announced its decision to have EOPA re-bid in order to keep the program.

Since the assault on the program calling such a move a power grab, those groups that have expressed an interest in bidding on the program calling such a move a power grab that is only about the money involved with securing the Head Start grant.

This is not in the best interest of the African-American community most affected by Head Start programs has been swift.

 Critics have denounced those groups that have expressed an interest in bidding on the program calling such a move a power grab that is only about the money involved with securing the Head Start grant.

American community in Toledo, said Larry Finkbeiner, former mayor of Toledo who has been one of those leading the charge to preserve the Head Start program for EOPA and keep potential bidders at bay.

Finkbeiner and former Mayor Jack Ford have teamed to decry the TPS effort. “This is a power grab by less than concerned public officials,” said Finkbeiner. The former mayor noted that EOPA is one of the last black-operated agencies in the central city and would not necessarily be compatible with an early childhood education program that many laid-off teachers say, there are simply not enough local candidates to fill the ranks of TPS teachers have been depleted over the past two years by retirements.

To the argument that such a contract would give TPS an opportunity to recall its own laid off teachers, Pecko offers a disclaimer. First, he says, there are simply not that many laid-off teachers waiting in the wings – the ranks of TPS teachers have been depleted over the past two years by retirements.

The TPS administration is equally committed to the process of trying to obtain the Head Start program although they are quick to debunk the theory that $13 million represents a windfall for a school district that already has an annual budget in excess of $300 million. “That’s not enough money to do the things the way we want,” said Superintendent Jerome Pecko, Ph.D., of the $13 million noting that if TPS becomes the grantee, the administration would want to spend much more money than that to upgrade the credentials of the classroom teachers and enhance transportation availability.

“Obtaining the Head Start program is an opportunity TPS embraces,” said Pecko, because of its expertise and resources and the ability to improve the overall quality of education for its students.”

This is an opportunity for a large, urban school district to be able to impact, have a positive impact on children’s development. There is an instructional aspect, for example, Head Start teachers working with kindergarteners to [ready them for the next step]. It’s an ideal situation for those children.”

Number of Head Start Students

For Pecko, however, the opportunity to run Head Start is not just about quality, it’s also about quantity. Based upon Lucas County’s demographics – population, income levels, poverty levels – critics maintain that the Head Start program is woefully under-attended. There should be 6,000 to 7,000 children in the program rather than the slightly more than 2,000 currently enrolled in EOPA’s Head Start.

“We know that there are over 7,000 who are eligible based on data they use to determine eligibility and we want to ratchet that number up considerably,” said Pecko, referring to the estimated by Head Start officials of eligible students in Lucas County.

However, reaching out to such a larger number of students will have to be found from other sources – community, local funding agencies such as United Way, Toledo Community Foundation, national funding agencies such as the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation (which funded the small schools experiment at Scott and Libbey high schools)

“We are talking to people in the community about collaboration,” said Pecko. “We feel we are building collaborative effort that will be part of our bid.

“We feel we are an excellent choice for serving the Head Start community in this area,” he added. “We will put together a plan to bring quality service and increase the quantity of children served.”

Such assurances are not likely to assuage the doubts of the numerous critics who feel that it might be best for all other groups in the community to step aside and allow EOPA to continue to manage the Head Start program. Many of these critics are quick to take TPS to task for its own historical poor performance in delivering quality education services to its students.

TPS responds, of course, that deliverance of such service is hampered by a current less than effective preschool education program.

Bids for the Head Start grant are not due for months and it is unlikely that the Obama administration would make any decision before next November’s general election. Such a timetable virtually ensures that the debate in the Toledo area over who should be managing Head Start will rage for quite a long time.
Hollywood Casino Toledo Presents $25,000 Contribution to NAACP Toledo
—Funds to Support NAACP Education, Membership and Voter Registration Programs—

Special to The Sojourner’s Truth

Hollywood Casino Toledo last week announced a $25,000 contribution to NAACP Toledo to support three initiatives that are providing important services to minority community members in Toledo. Hollywood Casino General Manager Richard St. Jean presented a check to NAACP Toledo President Rev. Kevin J. Bedford at the casino.

“From the beginning, Hollywood Casino Toledo has pledged to be a leader and contributor in the local community,” said St. Jean. “This contribution reflects Hollywood’s commitment to share our financial resources and the talents of our team members to boost the economic and cultural vitality of the region.”

Much of Hollywood’s donation will be used to fund program scholarships for NAACP Toledo’s ACT-SO youth program (African-American Cultural, Technological and Scientific Olympics). The year-long enrichment program is designed to encourage high academic and cultural achievement among under-served minority high school students. ACT-SO is a national NAACP program first introduced in 1977 to promote young academic achievers the same way sports heroes are honored.

In addition, Hollywood funds will support the chapter’s Financial Freedom Program that helps central city residents improve financial awareness and fiscal management skills.

NAACP’s Membership Recruitment and Voter Empower Campaign will also benefit from the contribution. The campaign’s goal is to register 2,000 new voters and expand chapter membership.

“On behalf of the members and supporters of Toledo NAACP, I thank Hollywood Casino for its generous contribution that will support these signature programs that are helping to make a difference in our community,” said Bedford. “We are particularly pleased to add additional ACT-SO scholarships for students in five Toledo-area high schools. This program has had a profound impact on the lives of more than 1,120 young people in our region as well as the many coaches, business leaders and civic volunteers who have helped to mentor the students and promote their academic and artistic achievements.”

According to Bedford, the donation from the Hollywood Casino is the result of a partnership between the agency and the casino that began during the casino owner’s campaign in 2010 to bring casino gambling to Ohio by way of a state ballot for a constitutional amendment.

“We have a great partnership,” said Bedford. “[The NAACP] supported the jobs they would bring to the community – that’s the partnership.”
March Is National Nutrition Month – Get Your Plate in Shape!

By Patrice Powers-Barker, OSU Extension, Lucas County

Calories are a measurement tool, like inches or ounces. They are used to measure the energy a food or beverage provides. Foods and beverages vary in how many calories and nutrients they contain. When choosing what to eat and drink, it’s important to get the right mix - enough nutrients (like vitamins and minerals) but not too many calories. Empty calories refer to foods that have extra calories that are “empty” of nutritional value. Empty calories come from solid fats and added sugars.

It’s probably not a surprise that many of the foods and drinks Americans eat and drink contain a lot of “empty” calories like:

- Cakes, cookies, pastries and donuts (contains both solid fat and added sugars)
- Sodas, energy drinks, sports drinks and fruit-flavored drinks (added sugars)
- Cheese (contains solid fat)
- Pizza (contains solid fat)
- Ice cream (contains both solid fat and added sugars)
- Sausages, hot dogs, bacon and ribs (contain solid fat)

These foods and beverages are the major sources of empty calories in the American diet, but we have the option to switch to make healthy choices. How can you consume fewer empty calories?

Choose foods and drinks with little or no added sugars or solid fats.
- Drink water instead of sugary drinks. There are about 10 packets of sugar in a 12-ounce can of soda, while water has no added sugars.
- Select lean cuts of meats or poultry and fat-free or low-fat milk and cheese. Fatty meats, poultry skin, and whole milk or regular cheese have more solid fats.
- Select products that contain added sugars and solid fats less often.
- Eat sugary desserts only once in a while. On most days of the week, select fruit for dessert instead of a sugary option.

Make major sources of solid fats – such as cakes, cookies, ice cream, pizza, regular cheese, sausages, and hot dogs – occasional choices, not everyday foods.

When you have foods and drinks with added sugars and solid fats, choose a small portion.
- Instead of eating three scoops of ice cream, order one scoop. Instead of three slices of pizza, choose one or two slices from a small pizza.
- Share a slice of dessert or appetizer, instead of eating it all yourself.

Question: I don’t ever gain weight. Is there anything wrong with me eating a lot of high fat foods and drinking soda pop as long as I don’t gain weight?
Answer: Not only do we want to eat low calorie foods with high nutritional value to look good on the outside, it’s also important to eat healthy for our internal organs like our heart! Empty calories don’t add anything to our health or wellness.

Question: Empty calories are not listed on food labels. How do I know if I food has a lot of empty calories or not?
Answer: Empty calories are not listed on food labels. It’s important to eat a variety of foods that are low in calories but high in nutrients. To find your personal total calorie needs and empty calories limit, visit choosemyplate.gov and enter your information into “My Daily Food Plan.”

ChooseMyPlate.gov gives recommendations of total daily calorie needs, and it also gives recommendations for a daily limit of empty calories. These calorie recommendations are based on gender, age and how physically active you are each day. The following charts show the recommendations or you can find more information online at ChooseMyPlate.gov.

* These amounts are appropriate for individuals who get less than 30 minutes of moderate physical activity most days. Those who are more active need more total calories, and have a higher limit for empty calories. To find your personal total calorie needs and empty calories limit, visit choosemyplate.gov and enter your information into “My Daily Food Plan.”

As you can see from the chart we really don’t need many extra or empty calories each day. Extras can fit into a healthy diet but you need to be choosy about what empty calories you will add each day. A small amount of empty calories is okay but most people eat far more than is healthy. Make some healthy choices starting this National Nutrition Month and continue them throughout the year!
Fabulously Fit Challenge – Spring 2012

By Angela Steward, Fitness Motivator
The Truth Contributor

I always think of ways to encourage, motivate and challenge everyone to live a healthier lifestyle. Not necessarily by losing weight, but by making healthier food choices.

While my family and friends were celebrating the holiday season, I was thinking of ways to challenge people to shed holiday weight. It’s hard enough getting people to exercise once or twice a week, how was I going to get them to exercise every day?

I decided to offer a fitness challenge to the women in my classes. If they accepted the challenge, they would be expected to do some form of exercise daily and to make healthier food choices.

Every day for six weeks straight, they exercised together, shared healthy meal recipes, supported each other, and accepted the fact that six weeks was going to be a long time to follow a strict fitness/nutrition challenge, but they embraced the FabFit™ Challenge fully.

I stressed the importance of “No Excuses” and they gave me none. These women were committed! Unfortunately a few had to withdraw from the challenge: death, sickness and hospitalization aren’t excuses, they were valid reasons to withdraw.

As a professional fitness instructor, I’ve heard every excuse there is, and have spent years of listening to reasons why people don’t exercise, lose weight and get healthy. I look at excuses as valid reasons to withdraw. Exercise your Options!
Get motivated. When it came to exercise, my Challengers arrived at the gym before I did. They arrived excited to exercise and even shared with me how much more energy they had since they began exercising daily!

Change Your Ways!
In order to lose weight and get fit, old habits have to be changed! Change your relationship with food, start to think of it as fuel and think of exercise as recreation! The healthier you eat and the more you move, the more weight you lose and the better you look and feel.

Each Challenger vowed to eat healthier and to exercise more. And boy, did they. When I tell you they worked hard, believe me, they did, and so did I. Everyone chose a weight loss goal of eight to 10 pounds, which I felt was a realistic and attainable goal, and one that could be maintained.

Before I get into the results of the FabFit™ Challenge, I’d like to share with you how the Challengers survived the challenge, and how you can begin your own fitness/weight-loss challenge.

For six weeks, my Challengers limited their calorie intake to 1,200 a day, they avoided processed foods and ate fresh fruits, vegetables, whole grains, fish and some meat. I encouraged them to allow themselves a few days a week to eat the foods they truly love (within reason) to suppress the urge to overeat. Reward yourself – but in moderation.

Just Me, Myself and I
You should want to live a longer, healthier life. Tell yourself “God has blessed me so many ways, I have to be healthy. I am all I have.”

Commit to a Change!
Healthier lifestyle changes are permanent. If you feel like you’re ready to commit to exercising, do it—eventually it will become a habit. Once it becomes a habit, it will feel like all the pieces of a puzzle have fallen into place.

Pay It Forward!
Once you’ve lost weight and shaped up, Pay It Forward! Encourage others to do the same. That is one of the reasons I became a fitness instructor. I once weighed 240 pounds, and after losing 70 pounds, my outlook on life changed. My health improved and I felt so much better. There really is no excuse good enough for poor health. Allow me to pay it forward by helping you.

Dear Ryan,

My husband and I are really trying to drop some weight before summer and I have been hearing a lot about you, your training and your boot camps. We both need to just get in better shape and feel healthy, but summer is our motivation. How should we go about training? Should we work with weights, do the boot camps or concentrate on cardio? Any help you can give will be appreciated.

A & J

Dear A & J,

That’s kind of a complex question to answer without seeing you two and knowing how you eat right now. I will approach this as if you are not doing anything nor watching what you eat at this current time.

All aspects of your question are important and they can all play a vital role in the success of failure of you reaching your fitness goals. We need to add your nutrition to that list of questions that you asked. You need to weight train so that your body builds muscle, speeds your metabolism up and burns body fat that you have stored.

I suggest three days a week of a full body workout for the first few weeks. If you are seeing results then keep on with that routine for a few more weeks, but be sure to mix up the order of exercises that you do and work to increase you poundage every week.

On the days you are not weight training do your cardio. Start with 15-20 minutes then increase two to five minutes each time until you reach 45 minutes. You can also do this on the same days after you weight train.

Do the cardio exercises that you like. If you enjoy the elliptical then do it and don’t force yourself to do other machines because “everyone” is doing it. I’m not saying don’t try other things because variety is a great thing but do what you like and enjoy your workout.

As for doing a boot camp, mine are different from what I hear the other people around here are doing. Being head of fitness for the military and training people for 25 years I try to make my boot camps more diverse and complete, incorporating cardio along with resistant training, plyometrics, functional and circuit training. I do more than just a fast paced cardio workout and call it a boot camp.

Nutrition - the key to all of your success or failure. You can train all day, everyday but if your nutrition isn’t good you will fail and become discouraged and give up on your goals. Start by trying to eliminate your sugars throughout your day also, cut out your starchy carbs in your last meal by eating just lean meat and veggies. Water, a lot of it. Remember, Rome wasn’t built in a day and you didn’t become out of shape in one either. Shoot for the loss of one pound per week right now. Good luck and I hope you reach your goals If you need that extra push come in and see me.

The Sojourner’s Truth
Advanced therapies for foot wounds are saving limbs, restoring mobility, and improving the lives of many people with diabetes who suffer from non-healing foot ulcers.

“For those 25 million Americans who have diabetes, impaired healing of foot wounds is common, making these advanced treatments extremely important,” says Peter Blume, DPM, FACFAS, assistant clinical professor of surgery at Yale School of Medicine. Dr. Blume is discussing this topic at the Annual Scientific Conference of the American College of Foot and Ankle Surgeons.

In today’s improved treatment of non-healing foot wounds, surgeons are using plastic surgery grafting techniques that were once reserved for other parts of the body, such as in facial reconstruction. Grafting involves taking healthy skin from another area of the body and placing it over the ulcer. Added to these grafting techniques are innovative technologies that stimulate healing. These breakthroughs are critical in diabetic foot care because poor circulation, nerve damage, and impaired immune responses—common in diabetes—make it difficult for a patient’s foot ulcer to heal.

One groundbreaking approach that promotes healing is the use of bio-engineered skin substitutes. Surgeons place these advanced biologics, which are made either from living or non-living tissue, over the wound to accelerate growth of healthy skin.

Another advanced wound-healing technology is negative pressure wound therapy (NPWT). This consists of a wound dressing, an air-tight film placed over the wound, and a drainage tube connected to a suction device that draws excess fluid. This suction enables healthy new tissue to grow.

NPWT makes it far more likely that a graft will survive. “Today, we never do a skin graft without using NPWT before and after the grafting procedure,” says Dr. Blume, a Fellow of the American College of Foot and Ankle Surgeons.

The success rate of all the advanced therapies for diabetic foot wounds is high, providing tremendous improvement over treatments of the previous decade.

“Fifteen years ago, we would wash out the wound, apply an antiseptic and an antimicrobial agent, put a bandage on the wound, and hope for the best,” says Dr. Blume.

That picture is dramatically different today, as noted for a patient with diabetes whom Dr. Blume recently treated: “The patient, a railroad conductor in his 50s, had fallen and sustained a wound on his foot that became infected. We cleaned out the infection and then used NPWT, at his home, for about 3 weeks,” says Dr. Blume.

This sharply contrasts with what would have occurred before the advent of advanced approaches. "The same patient probably would have been hospitalized for about 4 weeks and undergone major surgery lasting 6 hours,” says Dr. Blume. "It would have been a complex process, and he probably would have been away from work for 5 or 6 months.”

Time away from work, lengthy hospitalizations, and major surgery add significantly to the economic burden of diabetes. For that reason, the advantages of advanced therapies extend beyond improved medical results to include better outcomes related to work, cost, and lifestyle outcomes.

The estimated total annual cost of diabetes treatment in the U.S. is about $174 billion, with one in five diabetes dollars spent on lower extremity care. Non-healing ulcers and infection in the lower extremities are the top reasons for hospitalization among people with diabetes.

Foot ulcers develop in about 15 percent of patients with diabetes. These ulcers can lead to serious complications such as infection and amputation, and can also decrease the patient’s quality of life.

“In light of these complications and the fact that the prevalence of diabetes is rapidly rising, advanced therapies for diabetic foot ulcers will play an even more important role in the future,” says Dr. Blume.

The picture truly surprised you. You must’ve been 15 when it was taken, maybe a little older. You were smiling at something (you can’t remember what), the sun was shining on your face and you looked like you were having fun. But what struck you was how healthy you looked. You weren’t exhausted, not aching somewhere, not fretting about a doctor’s visit. Arthritis was not an issue. You were miles from cancer and heart disease.

Is it possible to feel like that again? To avoid major sickness? According to David B. Agus, MD, it is. In his new book The End of Illness, he explains.

Imagine a war that lasts 40 years. That’s what we’ve had since President Nixon declared the War on Cancer in 1971, and the battle still rages. In the years 1950-2007, says Agus, the cancer death rate didn’t change much. It’s been around for thousands of years, there are “millions of kinds of cancers,” and we may never be able to cure it.

The key, though, is to remember that cancer is preventable – as are many diseases. The first, most important thing to do to achieve the end of illness is to “get to know yourself,” says Agus, and to “be your own doctor first.” Health-wise, what’s different for you this year? What are your specific concerns?

Next, consider getting a DNA test to determine your genetic risk factors, so you can actively avoid problems. Keep up on the latest research but understand that the internet isn’t always the smartest place to find it.

If you’re over 40, ask your doctor why you’re not taking statins. Unless you’re filling a specific deficiency, save your money and forget about vitamins. Stick to a schedule. Buy comfortable shoes and don’t play football. Check into getting a proteomic analysis and get your medications tailored.

And if all else fails, do nothing but watch. Your body may be healing itself.

It struck me, as I was reading The End of Illness, that this book might have been shelved in the science fiction section a few years ago. What author David B. Agus presents here is as cutting-edge as it gets, even though he admits that there are still many unknowns and some things we may never have answers to.

But that’s what makes this book so intriguing: what we do know has come to the point of near-science fiction. Agus makes the argument for individual medicine from individual mapping, done through technology that looks at the “list of ingredients” that forms each of us. One-size-fits-all care is no longer effective and personalized medicine starts at home with things you can do today.

Unfortunately, what Agus leaves out is possible cost. Will healthy living will come at a healthy price? I couldn’t help but wonder… Still, this is a book that will make you think. You’ll want to annotate it, flag parts of it, and take it to your doctor’s office on the next visit. Then, with The End of Illness, you could be the picture of health.

Russel Simmons and Dennis Kucinich Stump Toledo

By Michael Hayes
Minister of Culture

Congressman Kucinich brands himself as a man of the people.
No matter the outcome of his race against Marc Kaptur, they share a similar platform.
A platform that Toledoans love to rally around.
When a politician says he will do whatever it takes to preserve services that a community depends on, you have to remember that he is still a politician. Which doesn’t mean they are all liars, but we should keep in mind that some trade-off will be made somewhere. Politicians make political moves.
All of them. Even bringing Russell Simmons along for his Ohio road trip was still orchestrated for a certain response even if Uncle Rush is an authentic Kucinich supporter. So our level of expectation has to be kept in check. Personally, I always get leery when someone promises me anything.
Kucinich’s promise was rooted in his fight for E.O.P.A. not strictly because of the merits of the program, but more so as part of his larger battle to keep various local programs in multiple districts from falling into the hands of the irresponsible federal government.
For Toledoans, E.O.P.A. is such a vital resource to our community that even though no politician may be able to single-handedly keep the program from being overtaken by Toledo Public Schools, if hope is all we have to cling to then we’ll cling to it. I am a product of the Head Start program. I have benefited from the H.E.A.P. program and so on and so forth. Personally want to see E.O.P.A. continue to be the valuable safety-net it has always been for Toledo. I don’t want to see it fall under larger public funding streams or held to regulations under some elaborate bureaucracy. It’s fine the way it is.
And although I respect Kucinich’s track record and applaud him for championing this issue... I’m still keeping my expectations in check.
That’s really all we can do.
The star power of Russell Simmons adds weight to a cause, but it also distracts.
I’ve seen Russell Simmons speak three times and just as much as anyone else, I value him as one of our black icons. But when he shows up in a city, it attracts people who are more concerned with their own photo opp than they are concerned with the issue at hand. That part of Kucinich’s visit, I cared nothing for.

But I did see a lot of concerned citizens there for the right reason and I think both Simmons and Kucinich’s appeal to the plight of regular working class Americans was right on target for that part of the audience.
Only time will tell what shape our communities are left in as progressives start to splinter and right wing nut jobs ramp up their attacks on every aspect of life regular folks hold dear.
They want us with fewer options for women’s health choices, fewer or lower paying jobs, higher insurance bills, higher energy costs, and less of a voice in how we are governed by those who govern us. Any fight against that sort of evil is the good fight.
I hope regardless of this past Super Tuesday’s outcome, that Kucinich and Kaptur can join together with others and truly fight for us.
Because we need all the help we can get.
The next open neighborhood forum is scheduled for TUESDAY, March 13th, 2012, from 6-8 PM at the Eleanor Kahle Senior Center (1315 Hillecrest Ave. [near Willys Parkway]).

Riley, the District 1 Toledo City Councilman, will be joined by the Department of Neighborhoods, Police Department & Gang Task Force, Department of Inspection and Code Enforcement, Lucas County Landbank program, Board of Community Relations, Department of Public Services to engage the surrounding community in an open & candid dialogue about “Preserving Our Neighborhood.”
