EOPA Head Start – Transformation or Demolition

Education is the best tool for poverty prevention known to man. “Upon the education of the people the fate of this country depends,” Parliametarian Benjamin Disraeli said 150 years ago, speaking of Great Britain. These words still ring true.

For some reason, however, learning institutions and agencies designed for philanthropic and social service do not always operate in harmony. When this happens – as it’s happening here in Toledo – the educational impact on the community, especially poor and under-served residents, is sub par. Sub par education outcomes further sub professional opportunity, to further fuel the cycle of generational poverty.

Recent debates about the effectiveness of Toledo’s EOPA Head Start demonstrate how competing interests often cause us to lose sight of what’s at stake and leave children’s lives exposed as most vulnerable.

Despite EOPA’s 48-year record of providing quality preparation for pre-schoolers, several local leaders and institutions have attacked the program rather than offering resources to improve it. EOPA has devotedly and exclusively served economically-disadvantaged children and families, with a special focus on developing reading and math skills required for future success.

Has EOPA made mistakes? Yes.

Can EOPA improve “best practices,” policies and procedures, in accordance with national models? Yes.

Should a leadership transition plan be developed? Yes.

Should EOPA’s board and governance documents be overhauled? Yes.

Does all this mean that EOPA Head Start should be eliminated? Absolutely not! Highly suspect is the timing of a March 6 Blade article that makes a big to-do about alleged mismanagement of funds. This non-story, almost certainly fed to the paper by an EOPA opponent, belies its own significance by reporting in the first three words that “An internal investigation...” - one initiated by EOPA – identified the problem. It is worth noting that:

· The so-called “probe” was conducted two years ago, and solely by EOPA’s leadership.

· Non-existent lots that were to be lawn-mowed using funds assigned to an EOPA neighborhoods program.

· To our knowledge, the “alleged misused” cash totaled less than $500. Compare this with the record of Toledo Public Schools, EOPA’s rival for $13 million in Head Start funds: leadership, administration, board and teacher disputes. Delinquent utility bills an vendor payments, a downgrade in bond rating; demolition of an historic building; over $600,000 missing during chief Business Manager Daniel Burns’ tenure; $165,000 settlement for wrongly terminating a teacher and a recent 2010-2011 state “report card” highlighting mediocre performance.

Nice try, EOPA critics.

Let’s not miss the fact that not a single word in Tuesday’s article called into question the program’s handling of one cent devoted to Head Start. Even with all of the issues that TPS has faced, it was afforded the opportunity to reinvite itself and rightfully so. Another Blade article recently quoted schools official Jim Gault as saying: “We took this district, turned it upside down, and started over.” So why shouldn’t EOPA Head Start be afforded the same chance for transformation that TPS enjoyed?

The answer is “double standard” - the same one that is typically applied when poor grassroots agencies are placed under scrutiny.

A solid transformation plan will allow EOPA Head Start to be the granter of federal funds it has received throughout the years, while partnering with public school districts, institutions of higher learning and philanthropic and social service organizations. In this scenario, the community collectively would avoid eliminating 350 jobs, bankrupting financial support and putting the education of our children in peril.

Allegedly, a high profile community leader referred to the central city as “a service desert.” If true, such a statement is insensitive toward the poor and inaccurate. Every community has a better chance of flourishing when there are philanthropic, social service organizations and institutions of higher learning willing to provide the resources and collaborative support to effectively combat poverty.

Since our community has experienced the benefits of transformation, I ask you to urge our politicians and organizational leaders to remove the double standard and champion a transformation plan for EOPA Head Start. Allow EOPA to retain its grantee status. This might not happen if separate agendas are pursued by TPS and other high-profile entities or if illusionary partnerships, like limited liability corporations (LLC’s) are formed to deliberately minimize EOPA’s role.

The central city must also take responsibility in this drama. We cannot tolerate mediocrity or silence when it comes to the education of our children. Again, education is the best tool for poverty prevention known to man. Academic excellence and astute institutional leadership is the goal. In the future, we must lead in transforming organizations that serve our community. Accountability is a two-way street.

Rev. Kevin Bedford, Toledo NAACP President
Money ... Money ... Money!

By Lafe Tolleiver, Esq.
Guest Column

Breaking News: (ANNN) This just in from the All Negro Network.

It has been reported (via a recent Sojourner’s Truth news article) that Pastor Kevin Bedford of Third Baptist Church and who is also the current president of the local branch of the nigh-defunct NAACP has received 25 thousand dollars from the mogul who owns the soon-to-be-opened Hollywood Casino in Rossford.

The donation is to be used to fund the program known as ACT-SO which provides talented local kids to go to Houston in July to compete in various categories of achievements (science, architecture, music, dance, math, literature, etc…etc.).

As the regional reporter for ANNN, I was able to reach Pastor Bedford in his office while he was taking a breather from preaching on the sins of the flesh. Here is that short interview:

ANNN: Pastor, why is the local NAACP taking money from organized gambling to fund ACT-SO when in the past they raised funds from other sources including donations from the black community?

BEDFORD: Money, money, money. It is all about the money. Does not matter where it comes from. It’s all good!

ANNN: Pastor, do you have any qualms about taking gambling money in light of your being a preacher of righteousness and about the glory of God?

BEDFORD: It’s all about the money. Money...money...money! If this money comes from crap games and slots and black jack, I do not care.

ANNN: Pastor, what did the NAACP try to do to raise the funds for this ACT-SO program as opposed to taking the money from organized gambling?

BEDFORD: Nothing. This was low-hanging fruit and was easy money to get and we took it and ran! Didn’t look back once. No shame in my game!

ANNN: Pastor, do you see any conflict between you being a professed man of God but yet having one hand on the Bible and the other hand on a slot machine?

BEDFORD: As long as one hand does not know what the other hand is doing, I am fine with that.

ANNN: As true that Third Baptist Church is considering installing a gaming annex in their basement that will teach the community the fundamentals of roulette, slots and black jack?

BEDFORD: If it happens, it will be closed on Sunday mornings.

ANNN: Pastor, do you see any correlation between gambling and domestic violence and other negative criminal activity?

BEDFORD: No. Gaming will provide jobs and tax revenues and that is a good thing for Toledo. If there is any negative fallout, that is what the church is here for. We will pick up any human detritus.

ANNN: Pastor, do you plan to be present at the opening events at the casino and, if so, will you wear your clerical clothes?

BEDFORD: Why would I want to do that?

ANNN: Well, since you support organized gambling, wouldn’t you want to be there and bless the gamblers so that they will have good luck with the god of mammon and maybe they will bring some of their gaming winnings back to Third Baptist and other black churches?

BEDFORD: Hmmmm... never thought about it that way. Let me give it some serious thought and I’ll get my robes out of the cleaners just in case I do go.

ANNN: Pastor, will you, and the other black ministers who supported this casino, be having any special days of prayer for the casino and its success and the success of the gamblers?

BEDFORD: Glad you ask. We will consider having a 24-hour prayer chain and will use the scripture about the wealth of the wicked being laid up for the righteous and the disciples casting lots for Matthias to replace Judas.

ANNN: Pastor, not to argue with you but do those scriptures apply to encouraging people to gamble?

ANNN: Pastor, what would you tell someone who has taken their tithes, rent money, utility payments and they lost it all on Red 22?

BEDFORD: I would tell them to always bet on Black!

ANNN: Pastor, do you consider the 25 thousand dollars as a “payoff” for your early public support of the gaming casino issue that was placed on the ballot?

BEDFORD: AAAAAAAAHHH! Turn off that recorder! This interview is over!

Well, there you have it readers. Make your own decisions about this hastily concluded interview. But there is one thing I learned and that is, place your bets on Black and never look back!

They taught me to be a better caregiver.

The doctor said my grandfather, “Daddy Joe,” had only months to live. So I moved in with my grandparents to help care for him. In Response...

‘Hats off’ to the Reverend Perryman for his March 14 article, “Ruffneck”. I now reside in Congressional District 5 resultant from the recent ‘gerrymandering’ by Ohio’s State government.

However, having been served by Representative Marcy Kaptur for more than 25 years, I have known her to be a “for the people” servant. The vast number of projects Ms. Kaptur has sponsored or supported that have benefited life for her constituents serves as a noteworthy legacy to this true statesman.

While Marcy has and will continue to fight for us, we carry a responsibility as referred by the Reverend Perryman. That is, “…solutions to persistent community problems lies in our ability to rethink methodologies and strategies.” We cannot just sit back and complain about injustices or inequalities. It is incumbent upon us to work diligently and determinedly to improve our social, educational and economic condition.

In response, Mr. Fought stated, in part, “The only way to turn this around is to get everyone involved – parents, ministers, educators, the business community augmented where needed, everyone….”

This, in recognition of the reality that our elected officials cannot solve our problems for us. We are obligated to work with them to the best interest of our families, our community, our nation.

Mr. Fought continued, “The loss of jobs has been devastating. But until we commit to our children, we will never prosper as a community.” Rev. Perryman concluded, “…we have no more time for halfspinepin…”

I say, a commitment to our children is a commitment to our future and to theirs. When wondering what is wrong, what has to happen, we should consider Michael Jackson’s “Man In The Mirror.”

The Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) Department of the Lucas County Juvenile Court announces the graduation of 36 CASA/GAL (court appointed special advocates/guardians ad litem). On Thursday, February 9, 2012, Juvenile Court Judge Denise Navarre Cubbon swore in the newest class of Lucas County CASA/GAL trainees. Included in the class were members of the African-American community: Erica Beach, Laurie Rogers, Charlene Saye and Dontia Vance.

CASA volunteers are ordinary citizens from all walks of life who are trained by the Juvenile Court to advocate for our community’s abused and neglected children. The CASA volunteer does an independent investigation by interviewing the child victim, parents, relatives, school officials, doctors and others involved in the child’s life who may have facts about the case or the child’s well being. The CASA volunteer remains on the case, making recommendations to the court and advocating for the child until a safe, permanent home is found for the child.

This training class is filled with individuals from all walks of life, including a police officer, a University of Toledo psychology professor, several attorneys, several mothers and grandmothers, two business owners, two teachers, a construction worker, two child care providers, a social worker, two nurses, a court mediator, and several students, among others. The class works together to bring a variety of life experiences to further enhance the discussion.

Highlights of the training included presentations by Larry Hamme, Ph.D., chief clinical officer at Unison Behavioral Health Group on cultural competence; Randall Schlievert, M.D., local pediatrician and director of the child abuse program at Mercy Children’s Hospital on child abuse and neglect; Rhonda Burggraf, J.D., on the art of interviewing children; CeCe Norwood, M.A., C.D.C.A. on domestic violence; Ashley Hall, M.A., on child development; and professionals from Lucas County Children Services on safety assessment, case plans, and the agency’s role in protecting children in our community. The class also received training about legal report writing, advocacy skills, substance abuse, poverty and confidentiality. The new CASA volunteers learned about local service agencies, attended a mock hearing, attended a Foster Youth Panel presentation, and toured Lucas County Children Services.

Leadership Toledo’s Youth Programs Assist “Blanket Toledo With Love”

Area high school students involved in two of Leadership Toledo’s youth initiatives have offered their support to “Blanket Toledo With Love.” On Martin Luther King, Jr. Day in January, the 54 Youth Leadership Toledo (YLT) participants offered their time and talents to assist coordinator Judy Meek in making a dent in the organization’s goal of making and donating 500 blankets to several organizations that assist Toledo’s homeless population. Judy coordinates the program on behalf of Trinity Episcopal Church and has been overwhelmed by the energy and support offered by the students.

Thanks to YLT in January and additional efforts from almost 20 VYPEE (Youth In Philanthropy Encouraging Excellence) leaders in March, the current inventory has swollen to more than 260 blankets with many months yet to prepare! The blankets are offered to such organizations as St. Paul’s Community Center, Beach House, Mom’s House, the YWCA, Sparrow’s Nest, Tent City, and others. “Trinity has been involved with Blanket Toledo With Love since the early 2000’s,” she commented. “For quite a while, there were just a few volunteers who worked hard to help meet the growing need. I just can’t get over how energetic and efficient these students have been – I wish we had a lot more volunteers like them!!”

According to David Schlaudecker, executive director of Leadership Toledo, “What makes the Leadership Toledo experience meaningful for our youth is that we talk about the challenges that exist in our community and offer opportunities for them to become part of the solutions. Whether making blankets or engaged in other service, we always overhear the kids talk with each other about other potential solutions. Then, when they return to their schools, they use their knowledge and talents to lead new efforts that bring attention to the needs of others. I think this adds an important new twist to the ‘pay it forward’ philosophy and it is really working.”

Those seeking additional information on Leadership Toledo should contact Kristina White, director of community impact at 419.241.7373. Those seeking information on Blanket Toledo With Love should contact Judy Meeks at 419.350.3223 (mobile).

Women’s Empowerment Summit to Be Held March 27

A new University of Toledo tradition brings together women from across the UT community for inspiration and community during Women’s History Month. The 2nd Annual Women’s Empowerment Summit sponsored by the President’s Lecture Series on Diversity and the Catharine S. Eberly Center for Women will take place in one week, Tuesday, March 27, at the Toledo Hilton on the Health Science Campus. The event begins at 8:30 a.m. with breakfast and concludes at 1:30 p.m.

The keynote speaker is Ohio Supreme Court Justice Yvette McGee Brown. McGee Brown was the first African-American woman elected to the Franklin County Common Pleas Court and became the first African-American woman to serve on the Ohio Supreme Court in 2011. She will speak during breakfast on this year’s theme, Healthy Personal and Professional Relationships.

After breakfast, attendees will have the option to join two breakout sessions: Workplace Aggression, led by Dr. Lisa Kovach, associate professor of education at UT, and Healthy Relationships, led by Fatima Pervaiz, program coordinator in the Office of Multicultural Student Development at UT.

After a lunch break at noon, attendees also can attend the final breakout session, How to Get What You Want, led by Margaret Hopkins, Ph.D, associate professor of management at UT.

“This is such a powerful event,” said Emily Hardcastle, interim community outreach coordinator at the Eberly Center. “We have speakers from such different experiences helping provide women tools to have better experiences.”

The Women’s Empowerment Summit is part of the President’s Lecture Series on Diversity, which includes a number of events taking place across campus to celebrate diversity.

Transportation to and from the Toledo Hilton will be provided with shuttles from Main Campus at 8 a.m. and 9:10 a.m. and to Main Campus at 9:40 a.m. and 1:40 p.m.

The event is free and open to the public, but an RSVP is required. To RSVP, e-mail plsd@utoledo.edu or (419) 530-7232.

Toledo’s Exports, the New Economy and You...

By Taron Cunningham, Urban Planning consultant

Brookings Institute released its Export Nation report, Thursday March 8, showing positive economic signs for both the Toledo metro area and the Midwest region as a whole. From 2009-2010 a 17 percent export growth rate, ranking third among the nation’s 100 metropolitan areas, by population, places Toledo in a strong economic recovery position.

What does that mean for Toledo’s New Economy? Well, I guess that depends on one’s perspective; at whatever vantage, I believe, there’s something in the New Economy for all toward America’s growing prosperity.

New Economy characteristics – export driven, innovation, clean energy and egalitarian (opportunity-rich) – outline the definition of how Toledo’s economy and its people will help shape the region’s 21st Century economy, following a near-decade of staggering economic losses.

Overall, in 2010, Toledo’s metro area (Fulton, Lucas, Ottawa, and Wood counties) exported $4.1 billion in value. Rounding out the top 10, Toledo’s export share at 15 percent of its GDP is on par with 10 other metros, an exception among the top 100 metros, projected to double by year 2015. As such, 2010 exports accounted for 11,000 thousand direct-jobs and supported 26,000 thousand other jobs.

Manufacturing at 43 percent of Toledo metro’s exports leads the resurgence in export growth. In particular, transportation equipment comprised a hefty 24 percent of the metro’s exports, according to the report. Toledo area also stood out among the metros at number nine in value of vehicle sales to China, as the mayor’s administration extends our Toledo-China relations beyond vehicles, with the selling and hopefully development of the Marina district to Chinese investors.

Federal policies from the Obama administration, such as the National Export Initiative and mirroring State Metropolitain Export Initiatives (Minneapolis–Saint Paul and Syracuse) the report touts as contributing factors, not only for export increases but also, catalyzing innovative manufacturing products and growth processes in the area. Even as the region and Midwest understand the need to diversify economies, manufacturing remains core to the new economy.

Innovation, as part of the new economy, derives dominantly from research and development which occurs at our area’s major universities and colleges and businesses. Innovation and technology transfers, from concept to market, include research and product developments that have occurred and are continuing at The University of Toledo’s Clean and Alternative Energy Incubator and Bowling Green State University’s Center for Research and Development, among the several initiatives each of the universities have which impact innovation and growth expansion in the area.

Other innovations stem from our community colleges (at some stage in concept, process, or product), outfits like Center for Food Innovation Technology, and other alternative energy technology businesses and groups in the area. Last we forget, other types of innovation happens in our daily conversations among colleagues, neighbors and friends about how we can improve our individual lot and our collective area for the better or do things otherwise and then try them.

Export Nation reports travel and tourism industry as the fourth largest growth industry at 6.2 percent share of metro Toledo’s exports. I’d make the connection that a substantial share of that travel is tied to the area’s outstanding universities and specialized medical facilities, known as “Eds & Meds,” by foreigners and visitors outside the new economy.

Eds & Meds generate not only service-sector demand, but professional services too. A local study I conducted on “Eds & Meds” anchor institutions showed, according to the Bureau of Economic Analysis in the 2010 fourth quarter, Lucas County’s “Eds & Meds” alone posted a location quotient of 1.02 and 1.09, respectively.

Location quotient is an economic measure of exportability, any number greater than 1 means the region specializes in that particular area over the nation. Despite the reported 2010 education industry’s $13 million in value loss, the industry remains robust, but may serve as a warning signal for state and local policy support.

As the new economy relates to low carbon (clean-energy demands), petroleum and coal products were number two in the area’s growth in gains, value and percentage of exports. Gains in value for petroleum and coal products were up by $72.4 million from 2009-2010, accounted for 17.5 percent of area’s export share, and valued at $730 million.

I’m curious to learn more about the area’s clean-energy efforts and methods to help both our environment and business growth strategies in the new economy? With such gains and growth, expect more weigh-in from the petroleum and coal industry and those with interest in the direction of the new economy.

Lastly, the new economy’s opportunity characteristic. A strong indicator of an area’s economic strength is its citizens’ education attainment. Furthermore, education combats poverty as a tool to loosen its vice. In Toledo specifically, as problem-solvers addresses the challenge of one of the nation’s highest poverty-ridden cities. Education is an opportunity to advance the economic climate the new economy is ushering. Educational access and means (ie: affordability) to metro citizens, at all age spectrums and education levels, seem to be more available throughout the area.

Workforce training programs in these growing and retooling industries and sectors are a part of this education preparedness also. Citizens must be skilled and possess the credentials to attract, retain and fill the positions new economy jobs are requiring.

The Export Nation reports a sound economic climate for what’s ahead; we must prepare and connect the many assets, goods and services, capital, and people from various walks to the area’s growth outlined by the new economy.

FORGET SPRING CLEANING; SCRUB DOWN YOUR BUDGET INSTEAD

By Phil Walton
Social Security Manager in Toledo, Oh

Spring is officially here. That means it’s time for spring cleaning! People everywhere are shedding the effects of fall and winter. But what about dusting off your long-term financial plan? April is National Financial Literacy Month — the perfect time to spring into action when it comes to planning your financial future. And if you already have a plan, this is a great opportunity to take another look.

According to a 2011 survey by the Employee Benefit Research Institute, more than half of workers report they’ve put away less than $25,000 in total savings and investments; a whopping 29 percent have less than $1,000 saved for the future. If you haven’t started already, now is the time to begin saving for your retirement — no matter what your age. If retirement is near, you’ll want to jump into the fast lane right away. If you’re younger and retirement seems a lifetime away, it’s still in your best interest to begin saving now, as compounded interest will work to your advantage. Experts agree that saving when you’re young will make a world of difference when the time comes to draw on your retirement savings.

Don’t take our word for it. You can check out the numbers yourself. A great place to start investigating how much you will need for retirement is to learn how much you could expect from Social Security. You can do this in minutes with Social Security’s online Retirement Estimator. The Retirement Estimator offers an instant and personalized estimate of your future Social Security retirement benefits based on your earnings record. Try it out at www.socialsecurity.gov/estimator.

We encourage saving for retirement, but there are reasons to save for every stage of life. A great place to go for help is www.mymoney.gov. MyMoney.gov is the U.S. government’s website dedicated to teaching Americans the basics about financial education. Whether you are planning to buy a home, balancing your checkbook, or investing in your 401(k) plan, the resources on www.mymoney.gov can help you. Another excellent resource is the Ballpark Estimator at www.choosetosave.org/ballpark. This online tool takes complicated issues, like projected Social Security benefits and earnings assumptions on savings, and turns them into language and numbers that are easy to understand.

Spring into action! Get started right now at www.socialsecurity.gov.

Are You Discerning the Heads Up on the Economy?

By S. Yvon Harper, CEO, Focus on Finance, LLC

One thing is certain. The economy is not done correcting itself. Over the last several years I’ve been warning everyone of this, which is no small feat. However, I now have support to back up my declarations as four states have recently implemented economic collapse plans. The states of Utah, Virginia and North Carolina have fully implemented their disaster plans. While currently Wyoming’s state senate is reviewing an economic collapse plan, which is expected to pass. More states will be sure to follow their lead.

One resource that is a part of these state’s plans is the ability to utilize commodities such as gold and silver for commerce. This is an important note for each of us to recognize. It effectively supports that in a time of economic disaster fiat or paper currency will be all but worthless.

While gold for many is overpriced at approximately $1,700 per ounce, silver is still readily within reach for most. The current spot price of silver is around $35 per ounce. Many financial economists feel that at this price it is extremely undervalued and will certainly appreciate in value during a global collapse. I agree, because unlike paper currency silver is a useful commodity used in industry for a variety of consumptions, which secures its value. Check out www.Ampex.com.

Other items to consider before a financial disaster include food and water. These valuable resources will become scarce. A recent study indicates a significant increase of home gardens to address the expected food shortage. Plan now to accumulate a storehouse for your family, which should include vegetable seeds, bottled water and canned goods.

One controversial step is the need to purchase a hand gun or rifle for protection. I have always steered clear of this debate, but finally my husband and I discussing the possibility. This action-able step was brought to the forefront for me when a client revealed that his business was being sustained by their gun sales. Which means, even if you are not armed the potential that others will be is highly likely and during an economic collapse may be of concern.

Surprisingly, many people will still be caught off guard when the economy shifts downward. But why should you be one caught in the crossfire? If this is not the handwriting on the wall for you to finally begin to plan your own economic contingency plan then what will it take? Remember time is always your friend when it is in front of you and your enemy when it passes you by. Sit down today to take account of what you have verses what you need to weather any impending economic storm.

Parenting styles are connected to kids being bullies or bullied in schools. Learn how to raise your children in a way that builds confidence and an anti-bullying attitude at the “Bullying and Anti-Bullying Behaviors: They Both Start at Home” parent night 7-8:30 p.m. Thursday, March 22 in Rocket Hall Room 1520.

“Parents who bully their children can result in them bullying their peers and a lack of parent involvement can lead your child to be a victim of bullying,” said Lisa Pescara-Kovach, Ph.D., University of Toledo associate professor of foundations of education and author of School Shootings and Suicides: Why We Must Stop the Bullies.

“It’s important for parents to think about their style of raising children and how it can influence their child’s relationships. We hope this parent night will help raise awareness and increase a culture of anti-bullying in the home as we continue our efforts to erase the behavior in our schools.”

In addition to the discussion on parenting styles, Oregon Police Sgt. Tony Castillo will provide information on the new ALICE (Alert, Lockdown, Inform, Counter, Evacuate) procedures to follow if an assailant enters a building or classroom.

The “Bullying and Anti-Bullying Behaviors: They Both Start at Home” parent night is a component of the Toledo-Lucas County Anti-Bullying Campaign to address bullying and harassment in our community. The campaign teams together UT, local government, school districts and law enforcement to raise awareness about the negative impacts of bullying and to create an anti-bullying culture in the area.

Last week the Lucas County Commissioners and Toledo City Council passed resolutions in support of the campaign, which also will include bullying prevention school assemblies, the signing of an Anti-Bullying Pledge by faculty, staff and students, and other events.

“Cash Mob” Coming to Toledo Black Community

Cash mobs to the local African-American community and get folks into black-owned businesses. Black Americans, it is estimated, have almost $1 trillion of buying power but only a fraction of those dollars circulate in the black community. Only two percent of every dollar spent by black consumers goes to a black-owned business, according to statistics.

It’s an opportunity for prospective consumers to see what the local community has to offer. Cottingham’s suggestion is to start the evening at a locally-owned restaurant such as Ruby’s Kitchen and then move the crowd to a retailer so that people can spend about $20 each at the store.

“We can help established black businesses and supplier groups,” Cottingham said of the purpose of the cash mobs.

Eventually, he said, such efforts can assist black-owned distributors and suppliers as well as those in the manufacturing sector.

The first cash mob is tentatively scheduled for April 12. Keep an eye on these pages for more information.

Our Black Year by Maggie Anderson with Ted Gregory

The bag might as well be made of gold. That’s because what’s inside cost you dearly: groceries mostly, a little milk, pasta, spinach, those chocolate bars you like and two apples. That’ll last you today.

Tomorrow, you’ll have to go get another golden bag and buy some more.

And if you’re author Maggie Anderson, you’ll drive 20 miles to shop even though there’s a grocery store around the corner. For Anderson, it’s not what she bought but where she bought it, and in her new book Our Black Year, you’ll see how careful purchasing might change a community.

It started with a five-star restaurant.

As Maggie Anderson and her husband were celebrating their anniversary, they started talking about how blessed they were. The Andersons were both educated, had great jobs and lived in a better Chicago suburb. On that night, they were the only black people at the restaurant, which spurred them to talk about “the discouraging status of blacks in America.”

As usual, they discussed some kind of action. They knew that black Americans have nearly $1 trillion of buying power, but that each dollar spent in an African-American business circulates for only 20 minutes before it ends up outside the community. They knew that just two percent of every dollar spent by black Americans goes to a black-owned business.

They were always going to do something, but life got in the way. Then, five years and two daughters later, the time was right: throughout 2009, the Andersons decided they would only buy black.

It would end up being a long year.

The name they chose for their endeavor conflicted with that of a major magazine which threatened to sue. Publicity and financial support were initially shaky. Black-owned grocery stores were scarce and black-owned clothing stores were few. Finding what the Andersons needed for their growing family often meant long drives or visits to iffy stores in bad neighborhoods. Businesses seemed to close before their eyes.

Then, a surprising thing happened: Anderson began to change some minds. Meanwhile, her experiment changed her.

Gotta be shoppin’ til you’re droppin’? Then you might want to drop a few dollars on Our Black Year, but there are some things you should know first…

Author Maggie Anderson is incredibly detailed in her story, so much so that she includes over 80 pages of notes at the end of this book. That’s good, but what’s not-so-good are incessant street-by-street, corner-by-corner descriptions of her search for black-owned businesses. To know that she’s looking is important. To know exact streets, for most readers, is not.

I also wondered why Anderson felt the need to re-hash the ugliness of critics. I think most readers would easily believe there were haters; to add their comments, verbatim, detracted from the well-meaning goodness of her experiment.

And that goodness is why I ultimately recommend this book: in the end, Our Black Year is a (mostly) do-able, interesting challenge for African Americans everywhere. Yes, this book has its bumpiness, but I’d say bag it up soon.
Long Term Care Insurance Is More Important than Life Insurance as We Age.

By Vince Davis
Guest Column

As we get older or as a result of an accident, because of the ensuing frailty or severe cognitive impairment such as Alzheimer disease, some of the things that we did before become more difficult to do.

Your health insurance does not pay for providing help to do the daily activities of normal living. Long-term care insurance pays you when you need help performing the activities of daily living such as preparing meals, moving about your home, using the bathroom facilities to relieve yourself, using the bathroom facilities to bathe yourself and maintain cleanliness, to mention a few.

Clients with diminished capacity to cook for themselves or eat their food without help are prime candidates for long-term benefits. Life insurance takes care of financial obligations or is used for estate settlement purposes, final expenses, pension maximization, etc. When we get older a great number of our financial obligations are handled. What we now need is the type of insurance that handles some of the cost of care needed when our health insurance no longer pays.

Unfortunately you cannot get the benefits without first having a policy. You have to get the policy while you are moving, and using your own facilities. As with most insurance, you have to get it before you need it so that it will help you when you need it. You can’t wait until you are just about ready to get into a car accident before you buckle your seatbelt and purchase car insurance. You can’t wait until the doctor tells you that you need to have a hip or knee replaced or that you need to have around the clock care before you get long-term care insurance. (LTCI)

Quite frankly they will not sell you a policy if you are already sick or in pain. Preferably you will get your LTCI while you are in your 40s, 50s and early 60s. If all other things are equal, the younger and healthier the applicant the lower the monthly premium. Even if you waited until you were old to get the policy, it is far better to pay premiums then to pay $30,000 a year for an in-home care giver or $80,000 a year in a facility.

The foundation of your financial plan should include long-term care insurance. Long-term care insurance helps families stay together. No one knows how difficult it is to care for a sick loved one without any outside help. Normally a family member has to postpone everything in his or her life to care for a sick family member. Not being able to button a shirt or cook a meal might seem to be a small matter but if one cannot perform the activities of daily living, one cannot live in his own world.

There are several types of facilities that a senior or non-senior injured or impaired person might consider. There are facilities that provide almost most seamless assistance called assisted-living facilities. Then there are facilities that provide 24/7 around the clock care and supervision. Quality care could run as much as $74,000 to $100,000 a year. At those rates with just a little inflation a millionaire could be broke in as few as seven years. That is because while your loved one sits or lies there and is unable to do for themselves, life goes on.

I will write another article about long-term care insurance because it is a complicated subject. If you have assets that you want to keep for your heirs, get long term care insurance. If you are broke or near broke don’t worry about it. The government will continue to take care of you, if they still have the money. Just ask Native Americans how well the government takes care of people.

If someone in your life is sick or dies and on top of that you have preventable money trouble too, then that is devastating. You can take care of some of life’s unexpected challenges by expecting them! You can’t take the love out of it but you can take the devastation out of it.

Catholic Charities Offers Life and Home Management Workshop Special to The Truth

Catholic Charities is offering a free four-day financial management workshop 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. March 19 to 22 at the Diocese of Toledo’s Catholic Center at 1933 Spielbusch Ave., Toledo. The Life and Home Management Workshop is designed to help Toledo-area residents who are struggling to manage household expenses.

Participants will learn skills to avoid getting behind on housing payments or utility bills and to prepare for financial emergencies. Participants will also learn:

- To establish and maintain a balanced life to move to the next step of financial stability.
- To strategically manage income to prepare for emergencies and to enjoy life debt-free.
- To evaluate thought patterns that lead to non-productive spending decisions.
- To manage time and to prioritize tasks.

The workshop is part of Catholic Charities’ Community Emergency Services program and is open to the public. To register or for more information, please contact Brian Rome at 419-244-6711, ext. 424 or 425. Funding for the workshop is provided by United Way.

Catholic Charities serves more than 31,000 people of all backgrounds in the Diocese of Toledo annually by providing food, shelter, prescription and emergency rent assistance as well as adoption services, jail and prison ministries and guardianship services to the elderly.
Easing the Pain at the Pump for Ohioans

By U.S. Sen. Sherrod Brown
Guest Column

W ith the average price per gallon of gas in Ohio topping off at $3.85, small business owners and families are eager for economic relief. Daniel Jarvis, who owns his own independent trucking company in Ohio, recently joined me at a gas station in northeast Ohio because he’s siphoning off more and more money to afford record-high prices at the gas station.

While there’s no single silver bullet, one way to help lower them is to address speculation. As Ohio families struggle to afford gas, Big Oil companies and Wall Street investors are getting rich. Every time there’s an outage in a pipeline, or a fire at a refinery, or turmoil in the Middle East, oil companies and Wall Street speculators use it as an excuse to spike the price of oil.

Speculation occurs when prices are driven by investor activity, rather than traditional market forces. And it’s costing Ohioans a lot of extra money at the pump.

A recent report in Forbes magazine showed that reckless Wall Street betting adds a $0.56 premium to every gallon of gas. If you are driving a sedan, then that is nearly $10 extra you’re paying each time you fill up your gas tank. If you are driving a truck, it’s close to $15.

Ohioans are losing hard earned money at the gas pump because some Wall Street banker gambles to make millions at the expense of average Americans.

For truckers like Daniel—Americans who ensure we can buy basic necessities in grocery stores and gas stations—high gas prices jeopardize their ability to continue operating. As another Ohio trucker recently told me, “When oil prices go up, the price of tires go up, it costs more for an oil change, and then, I have to pay for fuel surcharges.

One estimate put the total cost of speculation to the trucking industry at $29.1 billion. For most small business owners, high gas prices don’t mean high profits.

And higher fuel costs get passed along the production line, ultimately making food at restaurants and supermarkets more expensive at a time when working families are struggling to make ends meet.

That’s why, last week, I asked U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder about the work of a Justice Department task force charged with fighting oil speculation. And it’s why we must fully enforce the bipartisan 2010 Wall Street reform law. This law empowers federal watchdogs to enforce stronger consumer protections that not only help consumers, but also ensure a stronger economic recovery.

I’m now asking this watchdog group, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC), to enact and enforce those long-overdue consumer protections.

While we’ve seen 24 consecutive months of private sector job creation, our fragile economic recovery could be undermined by high gas prices. We cannot afford to sit idly by while Wall Street and Big Oil get richer and Ohio’s families and small business owners foot the bill.
City of Toledo Launches Spring Sweeps

Code enforcers to partner with private businesses and community agencies to Improve neighborhoods

Special to The Truth

Toledo Mayor Michael P. Bell this week helped launch the city’s Spring Sweeps initiative with the directors of the city’s Inspection, Neighborhoods and Public Service departments in the Library Village neighborhood of West Toledo.

The initiative is a joint effort by the city and the private sector to improve the city’s housing and commercial building stock by enforcing the city’s property maintenance code and linking property owners with assistance programs administered by the city, the Lucas-County Port Authority’s Better Buildings Initiative and Maumee Authority’s Better Buildings Center.

The departments will target tipping point neighborhoods already the focus of federally funded Downtown Toledo .

The departments will target tipping point neighborhoods already the focus of federally funded Downtown Toledo.

The effort will begin March 20 and conclude June 20. Staff will work in groups beginning in the Library Village neighborhood and will move to Arlington/Burroughs; Secor Gardens; Oakdale/Ravine Park and North Toledo/Point Place.

“This is an opportunity to target improvement of some of our city’s historically solid neighborhoods that have been adversely impacted by the economic downturn. Now is the time to improve them before the slip into further disrepair,” said Bell. “We can inform out citizens of the programs available to help them maintain their property to the benefit of the neighborhood and the community at large.”

In addition to linking property owners with programs available, staff will also work to educate citizens about the importance of using licensed contractors and securing proper building and mechanical inspections for the health, safety and welfare of residents and visitors.

“We’re working to take a positive, proactive approach to nuisance abatement and property maintenance,” said Chris Zervos, director of Inspections for the City of Toledo. “This will not only help maintain the value of individual properties, but also the collective value of the neighborhood. We’re appreciative that the block watch members, district council representatives and business community have seen the value in that.

Promotional assistance for Spring Sweeps has been provided by Th. Andersons, Byrne Paint, Home Depot, Behr Paint Co., Lowe’s Home Improvement Center Menards, Modern Builders Supply, Toledo-Lucas County Port Authority.

Justice: Sanford Florida Style

By Michael Hayes
Minister of Culture

Toledo thugs, y’all need to go down to Florida and find George Zimmerman.

I tried to write a sensible article about this.

I’ve tried to look at whatever professional graces I can think of to tie up the outrage we all feel.

I’ve tried to look at this from a gun owner’s angle, a community angle, a strictly legal angle, a self-defense angle and all kinds of ways yet none of them do justice.

So, I have no choice to but to be as apologetic and extreme as the situation itself.

I feel that George Zimmerman should be arrested, convicted and sentenced to death.

His life ended.

Usually, I am not a supporter of capital punishment. Evidence is shady, wrongly convicted people spend lifetimes in death row, and what does killing solve really?

However, at least a death row inmate has at one point been in police custody for their alleged crime. George Zimmerman shot an unarmed person in cold blood and has not been arrested. If we are not going to do away with the death penalty, if we are allowing it to remain a part of our so-called justice system… let’s put it to good use then.

Okay, now how can I in good conscience support any human being be slain?

So why go that far? Is it not really the archaic notion of “an eye for an eye”?

No. It’s not.

It’s a message that needs to be seen.

For all the black men, women and children lynched in public rituals throughout the South earlier last century whose killers not only went free, but lived full lives collecting memorabilia of the times they tormented their victims…

For all the innocent, non-criminally involved black lives lost at the hands of so-called law enforcement…murdered by the system that is supposed to protect them as citizens.

For all the times I walked to the damn convenience store in my teens… George Zimmerman should be arrested, convicted and sentenced to death for the crime of manslaughter.

Why do we use the term “manslaughter” if not all of us who fall under the code of law are not even seen as human by the law?

Three fifths of a human being, 3/5ths of a human being… it was at one point written in the U.S. Constitution that black people are to be considered only 3/5ths of a human being.

And now in 2012 we would be lucky if we receive 3/5ths of the justice we are due.

And then, Toledo, I think of you.

I can’t help but think of Trayvon Martin, then almost immediately think of Toledo, Ohio.

There’s a difference.

Young black males who are involved in criminal activity, carrying guns, using or selling drugs and just basically living foul and doing foul stuff.

Young black males who are involved in school or church or community, carrying books, being responsible and basically living just trying to get somewhere in life.

All the shootings in Toledo carried on by young black criminals, why don’t y’all hop on I-75 go down to Florida… find George Zimmerman and shoot him.

Claim it was self-defense, ways get away”.

Hell, actually… he shouldn’t even call you an asshole because if you are out here killing young black men you are and this racist are basically on the same team.

Yes, I said it.

I mean it.

Who cares if his guns are legal and yours aren’t.

Who cares if he claims to be some sort of neighborhood watch patrol and you are just some local gang member/black dweller/street hunter.

Every young black male raising his gun at another young black male is doing young black boy would never see 34. Would never become the aviation mechanic he was planning to become. Would never walk down there with Zimmerman along with the gun-toting young black thugs I’m suggesting go as well.

As our black leaders organize, and all those years of putting powerful and honorable black men and women in Congress and other positions starts to truly be tested… the eyes of the world are on Sanford, Florida. A place not even a 3/5ths the size of Toledo (yet slightly more black, percentage wise).

Toledo, I think of you.

The guns, the violence, the killings, the crime.

The ease in which police officers and court systems crush themselves down upon young, black men involved in violence yet can’t seem to stamp out black on black violence.

George Zimmerman shot and killed an unarmed human being in cold blood, with witnesses and 911 dispatch as his audience.

No arrest.

Toledo, I think of you.

TPD, I think of you.

Trevor Casey, I think of your memory.

I don’t know how much of this article my editor will even let go to print.

But I do know this.

Not to white people.

Not to black people.

Not to George Zimmerman and those who protect or agree with him.
