Racisms Without Racism I

By Rev. Donald L. Perryman, D.Min.
The Truth Contributor

Even though shrouded in the sheep’s clothing of academic jargon, the study’s vicious racism and warped thinking is plain and evident. Yes, racism remains alive and well today despite society’s visceral denial.

However, it is not the obvious acts or pronouncements which have allowed racism to persist and to thrive. Rather, this dark, shadowy evil, having become embedded into the very structures of society itself, has been able to persevere by “evaporating the very categories of its recognizability.” Thus, making the classic definitions and modes of racism “illegible.” That is the assertion of David Theo Goldberg, PhD.

I was able to discuss with Goldberg, the director of the system-wide University of California Humanities Research Institute and co-founder of the Digital Media and Learning-Research Hub, “Racisms without Racism,” a concept, he asserts, which enables the perpetuation of structural racism. Perryman: Please describe “Racisms without Racism” for readers of The Sojourner’s Truth.

Goldberg: Prior to my concept, Eduardo Bonilla-Silva (2006) argued that contemporary racism becomes racism without racist persons or individuals, so that racism proliferates because people declare “I’m not racist” or “it was not intentional,” etc. even as the acts of racism continue to circulate and be perpetrated.

If you look around, I mean – the latest controversy about the Heritage Foundation study by Richwine, even though whatever data he’s pointing to has long been shown to be completely empty-headed and lacking in its groundedness. There’s not been – either on his part or anybody associated with this case - any consideration that he himself is an agent who can be characterized as being racist. And so racism proliferates but the agent of racism disappears. However, what I am arguing is that there is the disappearance, in most instances, of the language to be able to identify that such and such an expression is a racist expression.

What I’m trying to point to is the more enigmatic, even more opaque kind of condition where you can have these proliferations of what we historically would recognize and identify as racism. But because we no longer have the language, the language has largely been erased as having its reference points, so that when you say something is racist, we don’t actually recognize it to be so.

The racism itself disappears even though racism proliferates. So that it’s this state of condition where it’s impossible even to make the claim, so that the person making the claim quite literally becomes crazy, i.e. “you don’t know what are you talking about, there’s no such thing, we obviously don’t understand what you’re saying, you’re babbling on like a madman,” etc.

And so I’m trying to point by this sort of racisms without racism, as this enigmatic condition where you have – which by all accounts is proliferation or a new proliferation of circulating racisms but they no longer have the apparatus to say this is what it is. Perryman: What are the implications of “racisms without racism for a contemporary public policy issue such as immigration?”

Goldberg: The classic conception of racism was predicated on the fact that the State, government agencies and bureaucracies were either directly engaged in racist expression and acts themselves, or provided the underlying infrastructure in the name of which racist practices and expressions were proliferated.

It is no longer the government in the State’s name or state bureaucracy or government bureaucracies acting this way. Rather, conditions have been structured so that private expressions of racism could be expressed by individual people or even individual businesses in an extended sense protected by the State itself, which claimed that it couldn’t prosecute because it decidedly is private expression using private resources. And as long as those expressions weren’t drawing on public or State resources there was nothing the State could do about it.

And anybody staying there will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, et cetera without identifying explicitly, the actual population groups in particular. So it’s a version of the same as the idiom about Paris: “Even the millionaires cannot sleep under this bridge in Paris.” As though the millionaires needed to sleep under the bridges. The people sleeping under the bridges are people who are homeless and so it’s the same logic here. It’s almost bad faith. This all protects itself from being charged in a particular kind of way. Even as it undertakes to produce the very results of the thing explicit about it to used to produce.

Ensuring College Graduates Leave with Degrees, Not Debt

By U.S. Senator Sherrod Brown

Guest Column

Student loan debt now exceeds $1 trillion. That’s more than credit card debt. That’s more than auto loans. In fact, student loan debt is only second to mortgage debt in this country.

That’s unconscionable. Students and their families should not have to sign away their financial futures in order to get a good education. Yet today’s graduates aren’t just leaving campus with newly minted degrees; they’re leaving with a lifetime of debt.

Students at KSU and OSU, Sinclair and Cincinnati State, Ohio University and the University of Toledo, and countless other schools throughout our state are looking forward to starting their futures upon graduation. These students will graduate into an economic recovery and better job prospects than other recent graduates, but their heavy debt burden means that graduates will spend their adulthood paying off their debts instead of buying a home, starting a business, or continuing on to graduate school.

Money that could be spent for productive economic activity will instead go to servicing debt.

According to the Wall Street Journal, the average student-loan debt for a borrower earning a bachelor’s degree this year is $30,000. That’s why subsidized Federal Direct Stafford Loans are so important. Most independent Stafford borrowers — about 80 percent — come from families making less than $40,000 a year.

Unfortunately, unless Congress acts soon, more than 361,000 college students in Ohio will face an average of $1,000 more in costs over the life of their loan, per subsidized Stafford loan.

Beginning on July 1, 2013, interest rates on these need-based loans will double from 3.4 percent to 6.8 percent for borrowers, unless we do something to stop it. Allowing Stafford loan interest rates to increase will hinder Ohio students’ ability to afford college — and hurt America’s economic competitiveness.

That’s why I’m fighting to pass the Student Loan Affordability Act, which would keep college affordable for more middle-class and low-income students. The bill would accomplish this by maintaining the current interest rate for subsidized Federal Direct Stafford Loans at 3.4 percent. This legislation would help ensure that more Ohioans can achieve their dream of going to college — at no extra cost to taxpayers.

In fact, this bill would close several wasteful loopholes. Among other things, this fully paid for bill would close a loophole for businesses that shutters their doors in the U.S. only to open in China or India or Brazil and get a tax break for moving expenses.

And it would ensure all forms of crude oil are included in the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund, eliminating a special tax loophole the saves the oil industry money but not making them pay to clean up tar sands or oil sands.

More must be done to keep down the cost of higher education — and the federal government must continue to provide students with federal student loan options with borrower-friendly terms.

Students should not be required to mortgage their future or delay their opportunities for a better life because of student loan debt. We can solve this problem, and save money, by passing the Student Loan Affordability Act.

Ohio Senator Nina Turner, “Deliverance Is on Deck”

By Fletcher Word
Sojourner’s Truth Editor

Ohio Senator Nina Turner, a Democrat who represents the eastern portions of Cuyahoga County and parts of Lake County – Ohio’s 25th Senate District, will be in Toledo this upcoming weekend. Turner will deliver the keynote message at the Alpha Kappa Alphas Sorority, Inc.’s Foundation luncheon and “deliverance” is the message.

“Moving forward is the key,” said Turner last week during a conversation with The Truth. Turner spoke to us from the road in between engagements in her very busy schedule these days. “We have a rich history in making and pushing social justice so ‘Deliverance Is on Deck’ is the title. The point is that throughout history, no matter what we have had to overcome, people have found the courage to act and to solve and right wrongs – even when it causes personal grief.

“I am going to be telling my audience that what people do today matters in terms of making things better for those who come later.”

A state senator since 2008, Turner, the Senate’s minority whip, began her elective office career as a Cleveland City Councilwoman in 2006. A first generation college graduate, Turner’s hot button issues over the years have been women, workers and voters.

During this era of Republican control of all branches of the state government, Turner has been keeping particularly busy over the past several years helping to fight back at the Kasich administration’s efforts to curtail the bargaining rights of public employees and to limit voters’ access to polls.

“We have a chief election officer who felt it was okay to appeal all the way to the United States Supreme Court to take away from voters three days to vote,” she says of Secretary of State Jon Husted’s attempt last year to eliminate the final weekend before Election Day from the block of early voting days. That attempt was blocked in federal district court and that ruling was upheld by the U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. The U.S. Supreme Court declined to overturn the lower courts decision.

Turner’s concern about voting rights has led to a decision to run for Secretary of State in the 2014 election cycle. While she has not formally thrown her hat in the ring, she admitted that it will happen soon. Even though she is not yet a declared candidate, Turner is already busy on the campaign trail making appearances all over the Buckeye State.

“Summer will not pass without me making appearances all over the state. We have more progress to make. We have to make sure our workforce is highly educated. Are we going to do what’s necessary to educate our children?” she asked of the task she sees as vitally important in order to attract high end employers to the state.

“I want young people in this state to get a great education, not an adequate one. We have to make the requisite investment in those youngster.”

Turner will be speaking at the AKA Foundation Luncheon this Saturday, June 1, at The Pinnaclce. Lunch starts at 11:30 a.m. for more information, contact Edna Robertson at 419-536-6974

Rep. Michael Ashford Elected as Whip of House Democrats

Toledo lawmaker named to one of the top spots in new leadership team

Special to The Truth

Tuesday evening, State Rep. Michael Ashford (D-Toledo) was elected by his colleagues to the number three spot on the new four person team to lead House Democrats.

“I would like to thank my House Democratic colleagues for supporting me as Whip for the House Democratic Caucus,” said Rep. Ashford. “I am very excited about working with the new leadership team, Democratic Leader Tracy Maxwell Heard, Assistant Leader Debbie Phillips and Assistant Whip Dan Ramos. Together we will continue to be a voice, not only for Democrats, but all Ohioans.”

Ashford’s election to leadership is not the only change on the House Democratic leadership team. State Rep. Tracy Maxwell Heard (D-Columbus) was elected as the new Democratic Leader of the Ohio House of Representatives; State Rep. Debbie Phillips (D-Athens) was elected Assistant Leader, moving up from Assistant Whip; and Dan Ramos (D-Lorain) will serve as the Assistant Whip and first Latino member of leadership in the history of the Ohio House of Representatives.

“We will stand tall in the fight for education, police, firefighters, senior citizens, and protecting the Middle Class,” Rep. Ashford added. “We will stand with our Union Brothers and Sisters to continue to create good jobs for all Ohioans. I follow in the great footsteps of leaders from Northwest Ohio who has helped paved the way for me, and I’m proud to have been selected to continue carrying the banner.”

The second term lawmaker is expected to officially start his new duties on June 1.

Not Paid at Union Expense
A.S.K. (After-School Klub)

May 9 saw the Year End Celebration of the A.S.K. (After-School Klub) program, a ministry of First Alliance Church, Toledo Urban Impact. During the school year, the After-School Klub (A.S.K) ministers to fourth–eighth graders twice a week. Volunteers from the community and First Alliance Church minister to students by providing help with homework, tutoring, activities, spiritual teaching, and building caring relationships.

According to Director Avery Cooper, the After-School Klub is one of Toledo’s best kept secrets. Their theme, he says is “Reading, Writing and Relationships” based on the fact that Christ was able to relate to farmers, fisherman and Pharisees by taking the time to relate and get to know them and that, he says, epitomizes what they do at the After-School Klub.

The club not only provides help with homework and tutoring, students are also provided a healthy snack and transportation within a limited radius. Cooper says, “The year-end celebration was a way of looking back in retrospect at all the students had accomplished this past year and to celebrate them with their family and friends. The theme again is RWR, Reading Writing and Relationship because for our students we believe that the best is yet to come.”

The program included song selections from the A.S.K. choir and vocalist Andrea Eaton as well as each student being presented with a certificate. Remarks were given by guest speaker Christina Rodriguez, director of Mom’s House and volunteers provided and served dinner and dessert for all in attendance.
The Spotlight Showcase

Brand Name Media Rocks in association with Pozativ ProMotions presented their first “Spotlight Showcase” May 18 at The Truth Gallery featuring live performances by Falease Sophae, Jay Hubb, Kimbers, Cheez and a special debut performance by the band, “By the 18th”.

Logic, founder of Brand Name Media Rocks said his reason behind the showcase was to spotlight talent in the city of those in the younger age bracket. He said: “When I was growing up as far as in the hip-hop scene, a lot of our elders never really reached back and brought us along so I saw that there was a generation gap amongst the music and decided to reach back for people that I felt were like minded with the same kind of music that we like and enjoy and wanted to provide a platform for them.”

The well attended event was emcee’d by Rap artist Chief while DJ Dre Wills kept the atmosphere live between sets.

The 10-week program focuses on personal grooming, bullying, self respect and table manners just to name a few. Started in September of 2012, Boyd says she volunteers to give back to the community and started Caterpillars to Butterflies because she felt our youth need more self-empowerment groups. Each session ends with a Graduation Tea Party where friends and family are encouraged to attend.

HoodWinked – An Eye-Opening Experience

By Carla Vette

Growing increasingly tired of the negative images portrayed in the media is what served to inspire Albert Earl to hold the workshop entitled, “HoodWinked-The Media Influence” on Black America” May 22 at the Reynolds Corner Library. The event was free and open to the public however, an RSVP was required in order to ensure seating.

Addressing a full house, Earl states, “When I get into this, if anybody is offended, maybe you need to be because the truth is the truth.” He further stated, “If you’re easily offended, I won’t be offended if you get up and leave the room.”

Earl began by laying a historical foundation beginning with the 1900’s and touching on the race riots that led to the burning of The Black Wall Street.

He then proceeded to show, in great detail, the media’s depiction of African Americans. He presented evidence of the men consistently being portrayed as violent, the women overly sexualized and black families until the Cosby’s, headed primarily by single mothers. The well-researched and organized information coupled with compelling and sometimes graphic images, communicated the intended message and left an impression on all in attendance.

One of the most surprising facts he shared with the audience is that the same three media giants that are heavily invested in the music industry, are highly invested in the private prison industry and showed through slide presentation, their role and influence on the Hip Hop industry.

Earl says the sole purpose of the workshop was to inform the African-American community about the impact the media has on our children and young adults.

He states, “The feedback has been extremely positive. What I hoped would happen is happening, people are having conversations with their families and children.”

Based on the overwhelming response and requests, Earl says plans are in the works to hold the workshop again in the near future.
Inferno by Dan Brown

In this summer’s hottest new book, Dan Brown’s Inferno is already one of this season’s best sellers. Hell may be coming to Earth. If that’s you, and you want to escape and are chased over and over again, relentlessly – which is exciting at first, but tiring as this book progresses. “Inferno” also ends rather strangely (but I won’t tell you why, because that would ruin it for you).

Author Dan Brown’s two main characters escape and are chased over and over again, relentlessly – which is exciting at first, but tiring as this book progresses. “Inferno” also ends rather strangely (but I won’t tell you why, because that would ruin it for you).

Now the good news: DAN BROWN HAS A NEW BOOK OUT.

And it’s a thriller with chases, intrigue, esoteric clues that require genius-level thinking, international locales, secret passages, and an evil madman. It’s complex and fast-moving. For a couple weeks’ worth of entertainment, what more could you want?

Fans of The Da Vinci Code will feel right at home with this book in their hands, and espionage lovers will want to dive right in. If that’s you, and you crave a good book, Inferno is already one of this summer’s hottest.

“New Slaves” by Kanye West

By Michael Hayes

Minister of Culture

I throw these Maybach keys
Verse 2

You see it’s leaders

I throw these Maybach keys

But I’d rather be a

And in her Hampton mouth

I throw these Maybach keys

And that sticks out most.

Y’all ‘bout to turn shit up

New Slaves

I wear my heart on the sleeve

I’m ‘bout to tear shit down

Spending everything

I know that we’re slaves

Now what the fk they go’ say now?

You niggas py, ain’t me

That’s that

I know that we’re the new slaves

Fuck it, c’est la vie

I wear my heart on the sleeve

But if that back and forth is creating art as compelling and necessary as “New Slaves,” I hope he never works out all his issues and inner demons.

What’s that art does.

It lets life torture you just enough to create the art that helps life torture others less.

But with his line about the prison system, how outspoken he’s been on Chicago’s murder rate in recent years and his overall willingness to push every envelope… Kanye West is necessary.

So maybe whatever’s pushing him to his limits is necessary too.

I guess we’ll find out

June 18 when the album drops.

Until then… youtube him and keep watch, because something’s happening up at the throne.

Kanye West may have impregnated a Kardashian, but he’s not as big of a fool as he sometimes seems.

Sure, the lyrics to “New Slaves” reveal a few contradictions.

I mean, he can’t really be anti-corporation and have a shoe deal with Nike.

Also, he’s not exactly speaking on my particular black experience with some modern day slavery to high fashion brands because I don’t even know who Alexander Wang is.

But it’s the risk taking that sticks out most.

This is like when Prince (a Gemini just like Kanye) wrote the word “slave” on his face and attended events where the worldwide press would surely see him just because he was at odds with his record company.

Now, if these people haven’t read their contracts…that’s on them.

Of course Def Jam wants a marketable Kanye West.

They may actually be asking him to spend LESS money if his expense account is full of multiple Lamborghini’s and Louis Vuitton bags and his budget gets slammed every time he wants to shoot a 30 minute mini-film that can’t be sold in stores.

Trying to reign Kanye West in may be for his own good in some respects.

But if that back and forth is creating art as compelling and necessary as “New Slaves,” I hope he never works out all his issues and inner demons.

What’s that art does.

It lets life torture you just enough to create the art that helps life torture others less.

By Carla Yvette
Society Editor

This year marked the 49th year of the Annual Debutante Cotillion presented by the Toledo Club of the National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women’s Clubs, Inc. (NANBPWC), held Saturday, May 25 in the Stranahan Theater Great Hall where exceptional young ladies from area high schools were presented to society.

The young ladies were nominated by their schools and selected based on qualifications set forth by The Toledo Club which include strong academics, tremendous social and volunteer skills, as well as having ambitious goals for their futures.

Months of character-building events, etiquette classes, a mother-daughter luncheon and 11 weeks of dance lessons attributed to the poise and grace displayed by the debutantes and their escorts during the formal presentation and waltz.
