likely than others to have absent or "nonresident" biological fathers, they are also likely to have men in their lives “who play the role of father to the biological children of other men.”

But we seldom talk about these important father figures who perform this needed and socially recognized paternal behavior toward children. These men often contribute invaluable economic support, mentoring, nurturing and the male influence that, not only breaks the hold of the contemporary anti-social culture which glorifies violence, sex and drugs, but also supplies young black boys and girls with a healthy image of black masculinity.

So while the community laments lost biological fathers and the disappearance of married fathers in two parent households, let us not forget to honor those social fathers: grandfathers and uncles; pastors and neighborhood mentors.

We celebrate single custodial fathers and “play” fathers. We extoll fathers who rear children in violent neighborhoods and those who parent in self neighborhoods. We trumpet foster daddies and daddies on parole, probation or reentering society after being incarcerated.

Tragedy or loss, from whatever source, is painful. But we commemorate those whose presence provides “beauty for ashes to the grieving, the oil of joy for mourning and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.”

For Americans, the third Sunday in June falls well short in prestige and popularity to the second Sunday in May. Father’s Day is a blue Sunday compared to its fairer, “better half” – Mother’s Day. Although for one day per year, I get special perks, including having my way on every single household decision, I don’t really look forward to June’s third Sunday.

Likewise, I am sure there are many others, both sons and daughters, whose relationship with their father may be “complicated,” estranged or nonexistent for whatever reason, that do not look forward to Father’s Day either. For me, the fact that I am a fatherless father often casts a melancholy shadow upon the celebration.

Tragedy, accompanied by poverty, makes it easy to shake your fist at God, curse the world or turn your back to what seems to be an unfair hand dealt from the bottom of life’s stacked circumstances. Yet I’m always sure to celebrate Father’s Day because being a father is a special gift. We lament the fragmentation of the black family, the exponential rise in unwed childbearing, widespread child poverty and the pervasiveness of an epidemic of black on black violence, which may be a consequence of failing to properly process our grief from the tragedy of high unemployment and mass incarceration among black men.

Pathological?
Certainly. But every crisis has one or more precipitating events. The symptoms are all there, especially among young black men. As a teenager, I experienced many of these same indications of the sudden unexpectedness of father-loss. Young people are angry, hostile and depressed. They seem to have deep-rooted feelings of abandonment that they don’t understand, and are even uncomfortable at how people look at them.

They often withdraw and repeatedly shout things like “just leave me alone!” Black adolescents and young adults are also likely to displace their aggression on other people. Most notable among their symptoms is irrational thinking and actions, which more mature adults are wont to claim, “That’s just plain stupid!”

So, what about the “catastrophic state of our black family life?”
First of all, the fact that a positive male presence in the home contributes to greater emotional stability, educational and economic achievement and success in reducing incarceration (among males in particular) is not debatable.

However, the truth is, “You can’t eat love!” Men of all races equate masculinity, and in turn fatherhood, with the ability to “locate, obtain, maintain, and identify with employment in the public workforce,” (Roy, 2004). Parenting statuses and the place in family life for black males directly correlates with their ability to obtain consistent, full-time work.

With black unemployment, the place in family life for black males directly correlates with their ability to obtain consistent, full-time work. The so-called black man can no longer simply provide for his family. He must be an active player in their education, health and emotional development.

Secondly, although black children are more likely than others to have absent or “nonresident” biological fathers, they are also likely to have men in their lives “who play the role of father to the biological children of other men.”

But what about these important “play” fathers who perform this needed and socially recognized paternal behavior toward children? These men often contribute invaluable economic support, mentoring, nurturing and the male influence that, not only breaks the hold of the contemporary anti-social culture which glorifies violence, sex and drugs, but also supplies young black boys and girls with a healthy image of black masculinity.

Dear Secretary Husted,

On February 13th, the Ohio Legislative Black Caucus introduced a plan to the Statehouse, and comprehensive voting rights were a key component of the plan. As President of the Ohio Legislative Black Caucus and State Representative of the 33rd District in Hamilton County, I am extremely disappointed with your May 31st vote to investigate Ohio voters in Hamilton County. Ohioans expect leadership from their statewide elected officials, especially from one tasked with overseeing the fundamental American right to vote.

Ohioans have had to fight to have their provisional ballots counted and have faced voter suppression tactics, including limited early voting hours and voter intimidation billboards that were strategically placed in African American neighborhoods. Many in our country have fought for, and in some cases even died for, the right to vote. Yet, it is unfortunate that during the past few years, the focus has been on voter suppression instead of voter access and education. Many of these voters come from African American and low income neighborhoods, and they would benefit from comprehensive voter education program.

This convention is a chance for NAACP activists to celebrate our victories and prepare for the year ahead. We have never been content to just memorialize past icons; we need to be the heroes of our present and future.

This year’s convention speakers include established and emerging civil rights leaders, elected officials, and faith-based leaders. “The NAACP is still the most influential and relevant voice in the fight for social justice,” stated NAACP Vice Chairman Leon Russell. “Even after a banner year for the NAACP, we still face several challenges and we must continue to set the tone for a greater nation and push for civic engagement. We thank the Orlando Branch, Florida State conference, and Visit Orlando for graciously hosting us for the 104th Annual Convention. Our mission is to define the civil rights agenda for this century, just as we have done since our founding.”

“While the future of voting rights and equal access to education hang in the balance, our national and state conferences must hold strong” said NAACP Florida State Conference President Adora Obi Nwese. “This year’s convention is essential as we map out strategies to continue to fight attacks on our civil rights. We will join with others across the country to protect rights most sacred in our democracy. As one nation, we shall not be moved.”

“We in the Orange County Branch NAACP are pleased to welcome and privileged to host the 104th NAACP National Convention.” Keyna Riley, NAACP Orange County Branch President. “As we continue the fight for equality and social justice for all Americans, our Branch and Orlando-Orange County community extend every hospitality and want to help assure that your convention experience is positive and meaningful. As our Branch membership, local governments, businesses, volunteers, and supporters continue to partner with us in the advocacy we bid you a successful, productive, and celebratory convention. And please enjoy your stay with us.”

Your vote to investigate these voters that clearly followed Ohio revised code chapter 3509.09 should have been nonpartisan, but it clearly was not.

Make no mistake, the ballots that these 39 Hamilton County residents casted are indeed lawful. You should know, perhaps better than local election officials, that Ohio Revised code chapter 3509.09 section (B) (2) clearly defines the precise situation with which the Hamilton County Board of Elections was faced. It states: “If a registered elector appears to vote in that precinct and that elector has requested an absent voter’s ballot for that election and the director has received a sealed identification envelope purporting to contain the elector’s voted absent voter’s ballots for that election, the elector shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot under section 3505.181 of the Revised Code in that precinct on the day of that election.”

I implore you to do the right thing for Ohio voters and use your power to stop these absurd investigations of voters who obviously cast ballots in compliance with Ohio law.

I would like to meet with you to resolve this matter quickly.

Sincerely,

Alicia Reece

Rep. Ashford Supports Bill to Establish Rape Crisis Center Funding

Proposal includes $2 million over next two years, trust fund and victim advocates

The Ohio House unanimously approved Substitute House Bill 108 last week, legislation to provide first-time funding to some 27 rape crisis programs throughout the state by appropriating $2 million from the General Revenue Fund. HB 108 also establishes a Rape Crisis Program Trust Fund administered by the Attorney General and funded through registration fees of sex offenders, new fines for sexually oriented offenses and donations.

“This legislation is past due,” said Rep. Michael Ashford. “Although I would have liked to see the funding dedicated to these meaningful programs and services for victims of sexual assault, I think this is a step in the right direction. I am hopeful that this won’t be the last you hear from the Ohio House on adequate funding for rape crisis programs.”

The State Victims Assistance Advisory Council, which provides recommendations and advocacy for victim services and policies, would gain two new members under HB 108.

“We need a full-time business manager; the members are saying we need someone out there,” said David Fleetwood at the end of March when he decided to challenge Local 500 of the Laborers’ International Union Business Manager Phil Copeland for the leadership of the union. On June 9, union members got what they had been clamoring for, a full-time leader in Fleetwood who took over the top post in an election that brought him a victory over the now former business manager, Copeland. Fleetwood received 132 votes to Copeland’s 94. A total of 315 of Local 500’s 978 members voted.

The victory was sweet vindication for Fleetwood, who, when he earlier informed Copeland of his intention to challenge him in the next election, was promptly fired from his field agent/vice president’s post. Copeland, who was elected Lucas County Recorder in November, had announced in December that he would be relinquishing his business manager post, but later changed his mind. Until his election loss this month, Copeland was being paid $126,127 as Local 500’s business manager and $71,286 as County Recorder.

Fleetwood and his allies within the union felt that they weren’t getting their money’s worth.

On March 30, Fleetwood relates, he had an evening’s conversation with Copeland, who had been asking him for several weeks, if he intended to run against him. “I said I want to run for business manager,” Fleetwood told his boss, “I can take us in another direction. We are leaking money and it’s my turn to step up.”

Copeland’s reaction was unanticipated. “I thought he would ask, ‘what the problem is and can we work it out?’” said Fleetwood. “But at the end of the conversation, he said ‘you know, I’m gonna need your keys and your car.’”

A subsequent union meeting showed widespread disgruntlement amongst the membership over the perception of Copeland’s split loyalties in balancing two posts, Copeland himself was unapologetic about how he handled the impending challenge from one of his underlings.

“I’m not going to pay a guy for running against me,” he told the members in attendance.

“I was terminated because I exercised my democratic right to run for office,” said Fleetwood when he later explained exactly why he was running.

“We pay our business manager a full-time salary,” he said. “We need a full-time rep all day long. We need someone on call ready to serve his members.”

“I laid him off because of trust and loyalty,” said Copeland some weeks after the incident. “I explained exactly why he should have let him keep his election. “I felt that he didn’t do anything behind Phil’s back. Phil took his livelihood away from him. Fleetwood was the best [field] agent we had; he was fighting for the people – a very knowledgeable, very fair person.”

Another long-time member, Carlos Washington, echoed Jackson’s concerns about the way the dismissal was handled.

“It was handled very poorly for several reasons,” said Washington. “First, and speaking on behalf of the 978 members, this is a seasonal job and this is the beginning of our season. Phil Copeland fired the most experienced agent we have, leaving only one agent to oversee. Without enough agents in the field, contractors get to do whatever they want. “We are tired and sick of it and we are going to come out and have our voices heard at election time,” continued Washington.

One of Fleetwood’s first decisions immediately after election was, in fact, to try to increase the number of field agents in the six county area (Lucas, Wood, Fulton, Henry, Defiance and Williams) managed by Local 500 from two (officially) to four to better provide the oversight mentioned by Washington.

Fleetwood has been elected to serve a three-year term of office.
The 100 Black Men of America (100 BMOA) focused on the awareness and solutions for a number of health and wellness issues impacting African Americans at its 27th Annual Conference held June 5-9, 2013 in New Orleans.

Under the theme: Optimizing Health & Wellness: Body, Mind and Spirit, over 2,100 attendees, including many youth, heard experts on panels and in workshops, learned about new mentoring and education techniques, and recognized best practices to improve health personally and in their communities.

“Health and wellness is crucial to the youth we serve through our ‘Mentoring the 100 Way Across a Lifetime’. Our efforts, that also include education and economic empowerment, are not nearly as effective if the youth we mentor are not healthy and well,” said Curley M. Dossman, Jr., chairman of 100 Black Men of America, Inc. “So we are intensifying our efforts to raise the consciousness of the state of health in the African American community, and enhancing our programs’ impact in this area.”

The health state of African Americans was put in the spotlight since there is greater incidence of prostate cancer, diabetes, hypertension, and HIV/AIDS for them versus the general population. Further, African Americans are more likely to die from heart disease, lung cancer, and stroke than Caucasians. Obesity and high blood pressure are also significant issues that are affecting black youth.

In his conference keynote address, Dr. John E. Maupin, Jr., president of Morehouse School of Medicine, challenged the audience to help change the health and wellness culture of the African-American community saying, “We are out of balance, out of order, and almost out of time.”

In response to the growing risks for prostate cancer—the incidence rate is 60 percent higher for African Americans and the death rate is 2½ times that of Caucasian men—the 100 BMOA reaffirmed its 2012 Prostate Cancer Statement that the current standard medical guidelines for prostate cancer screening are insufficient for African-American males, putting them at greater risk.

As stated by Dr. Adewale Troutman, Health & Wellness Committee chairman of 100 Black Men of America, Inc. and president of the American Public Health Association (APHA), “The problem before us today is there are no definitive guidelines for African-American men at highest risk of prostate cancer. Therefore, 100 BMOA stands by our 2012 statement and urges the AUA (American Urological Association), the National Comprehensive Cancer Network, and other appropriate organizations to convene a panel for the specific purpose of developing guidelines applicable to high risk men.”

The 2013 Education Issues Summit was titled, “Reclaiming Our Black Males and Public Schools through Advocacy, Public Policy, and Community Engagement.”

Chairman Dossman moderated a panel which consisted of: David Johns, White House Initiative on Education Excellence for African Americans; J. Delano Ford, Louisiana Recovery School District; Dr. Amy T. Wilkins, The College Board; John Jenkins, University of Houston; Dr. Bryant Marks, Morehouse College; Ken Campbell, BAEO; and Henry Hipps, The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. In addressing a condition that results in only 50 percent of black males graduating from high school, the panel offered solutions for both our communities and school systems.

100 BMOA conducted its traditional Community Empowerment Project (CEP) by providing a health and wellness fair for Central New Orleans residents in partnership with the 100 Black Men of Metro New Orleans. The CEP was held at the Ashe’ Cultural Arts Center. More than 1,200 residents received health education that included: disease prevention strategies, diet and exercise, disaster preparedness, spiritual health, financial health, and affordable health care access. In addition, health screenings for HIV/AIDS, prostate cancer, breast cancer, dental issues, and stroke were conducted, as were body mass index and blood pressure checks. Exhibits and demonstrations on health-promoting subjects, such as how to cook nutritious meals, were also given in a festive atmosphere of healthy food, fun, and games that engaged the entire family.

At this year’s conference, 100 BMOA announced the following partnership investments: Wells Fargo $400,000 (Impact Expansion in Mentoring & Education), UPS $125,000 (Leadership Development & Scholarships), Anheuser-Busch $175,000 (Mentoring & Water Conservation), Actua $50,000 (Health Power 2013 / Youth Movement), and General Motors $35,000 (Impact Expansion for Mentoring & Education).

“These partners reflect our collaboration with like-minded organizations and individuals who share our common cause of mentoring youth in at-risk situations,” Chairman Dossman said. “As part of our “100 as One” platform, we are deepening our One Cause and broadening our One Network. These partners are part of that network which extends internationally through our 110 chapters.”

Homegoings introduces some of Owens’ customers, who express a mix of grief, humor and celebration. Linda “Red” Williams-Miller, for instance, jovially plans her own funeral down to the last detail, including the exact shade of her namesake color to be used for her hair and nails. The children of Queen Petra are unsure how to honor their mother’s multicultural legacy, until Owens suggests there’s no reason they can’t have a parade, led by a white horse and carriage, down the very block where their mother was a street vendor.

Williams-Miller describes the African-American funeral this way: “Homegoing. A happy occasion . . . going home to be at peace . . . You’re going home to meet the ones that went on before you and they’re there waiting for you.” Throughout Homegoings, Owens relates the culture and history of death and mourning in the black community, harrowing back to slavery and segregation.

When it comes to death and funerals, African-American people, we have our own way,” Isaiah Owens states in the new documentary Homegoings. “It has worked for us throughout the ages; it has kept us balanced, sane. And everybody knows that it’s going to be a sad, good time.”

A thumbnail biographical sketch of Owens might sound a little odd: A South Carolina boy obsessed with funerals grows up to be a renowned funeral director in New York City, where he learned his craft. A few years later, 17-year-old Owens to New York. His mother was a street vendor. The very block where their horse and carriage, down the street was stable, appeared to have means. “But neither Owens nor his mother, Willie Mae, who today works as a receptionist at his other funeral parlor in Branchville, S.C., can completely account for the Owens’ fascination with burials, even as a boy. When Owens was five, he buried a matchstick and put flowers on top of the soil. After that he progressed to burying “frogs . . . chickens; I buried the mule that died. I buried the neighbor’s dog, and the dog’s name was Snowball.”

Willie Mae says with a smile, “Anything that he can get, he can lift. He can lift. That was his calling.” In 1968, this calling took 17-year-old Owens to New York City, where he learned his craft. A few years later, he opened what would become one of Harlem’s most popular funeral homes, with a largely Baptist clientele. Start Your Own Home Business After 50 by Robert W. Bly

Retirement is too far away.

You can see it from your work desk. It’s tantalizingly close, filled with sun and sand, golf and travel, but it’s oh-so-unreachable. Yes, you have a job you’re happy to have. No, you don’t want it forever.

So how would you feel being your own boss? Making good money, doing something you love, having flexibility to travel, learning new things? If you think you’re too old for that, you’re not -- and Start Your Own Home Business After 50 by Robert W. Bly explains why.

One of these days, you’d love to be able to throw the alarm clock away and forget work. You hope to retire sooner, rather than later - which means, of course, that money (and lack thereof) is a definite concern.

And you’re not alone. Robert Bly says that the number of workers age 55 and older is projected to grow by nearly 50 percent in the next three years. Stretching retirement dollars has never been more important - which is where this book comes in.

The first step, Bly says, is to decide which of your former jobs you enjoyed and were good at. If nothing in particular sticks out, what hobbies would you like to develop into “an expert-level gig”? Can you freelance, or do consulting? Would a former employer make a good client? Use your experience (an advantage you’ve got over younger workers) to winnow through the possibilities.

Next, decide if the business is for you. Do your strengths mesh with what’s needed to run things properly? Do you have stick-to-itiveness enough to stay focused and work solo? Are you prepared to do your billing, tech support, and other necessary tasks, or would you hire someone to do them? Can you market yourself and promote your new business? Do you need financing (the availability of which is another advantage)?

Once you’ve figured out the details, then it’s time for launch, but Bly says there’s one thing to remember first: “Make yourself happy. When you do,” he says, “those who care about you will eventually be happy for you.”

Someday, you’ll retire and you’ll get to do the things you love. So why not make money doing them, with the help of Start Your Own Home Business After 50.

Beginning with a handful of home business opportunity ideas, author Robert W. Bly offers plenty of sound advice here, including food for thought to determine if the endeavor is viable. His words are encouraging, but cautious, and he doesn’t forget to warn his readers of the pitfalls in becoming an entrepreneur. That kind of balance is great to see, particularly if you’re on the fence about business-ownership or are just starting to think about self-employment.

There’s a little bit of annoying repetition in this book but, overall, it’s a valuable tool for anyone who needs to plan for the future or just wants a good change of pace.

If that’s you, then Start Your Own Home Business After 50 is a book you won’t want too far away.

Tips for Small Business Owners to Face Today’s New Challenges

Special to The Truth

These days, it can be an uphill battle for small business owners. Even with all the makings of success -- a great product or service, the right location, good equipment and a loyal staff -- gaining customers in today’s world spells new technical challenges and new costs.

Get Online

Small businesses always have and always will be tasked with gaining recognition and standing out from the competition. But with everyone’s eyes forever on their gadgets and smartphones, a simple billboard won’t cut it anymore.

American small business owners are showing up on the Internet in droves to market themselves, according to a recent report from online business community Manta. Because the competition is already there, building a website and participating in social media via Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest and other social media tools is crucial. But an Internet presence is just the first step.

Maximize the Effort

From creating web text and social media activity to the development of interactive graphics, audio and video, turning your website visitors into true customers and sales requires expertise. Whether you are hiring a qualified tech specialist to work for you full-time or outsourcing your efforts to an agency or freelancer, maximizing your online presence is an expenditure for which you may not have accounted for when you first drew up your business plan.

Taking Your Leadership Skills to the Next Level

By Tiffany Reynolds

Let me start by sharing with you this wonderful quote: “Leadership is influence - nothing more nothing less.”

This is John Maxwell’s definition of leadership.

As a certified trainer, speaker and coach with the John Maxwell Team my role is to assist you in taking your leadership skills to the next level.

I have a question for you. What do you really want out of life? I know you want a job. And, I know you want to be financially secure. And, I know you might have a job/career already but still not completely satisfied with your life.

Here’s my challenge for you, have you created a visual story board? A visual story board depicts all the things you want to accomplish. Here’s an example, do you want to go back to school, obtain a job in accounting?

Grab an old magazine, flip through the pages and cut out a picture of someone graduating with a cap and gown. Also, find a picture of an accountant. Paste these images to your story board and include your photo and the date you plan to obtain your degree and your job as well.

Don’t stop there. Whatever it is you want to accomplish place it on the board. Once the board is complete post it in a location and reference it every day to have a clear visual in your mind. This practice helps you remain focus on things you wish to accomplish.

I would also like to personally invite you to join me on a F.R.E.E. Mastermind Group study on June 25 and June 27.

Have a fantastic rest of the week!

With Love,

Will You Be Able to Afford a Comfortable Retirement?

Special to The Truth

If you’re like many Americans, you have concerns about funding your retirement. According to a recent survey conducted by Ally Bank, retirement planning tops Americans’ financial anxieties.

Rather than take a head-in-the-sand approach to your future, be proactive. Wise investments can offer advantages like tax-free, aggressive growth. And experts say the best time to get started is now, as the IRS announced in October 2012 that the limit on contributions to Traditional and Roth IRAs would rise for the first time since 2005, from $5,000 to $5,500.

“The increased contribution limit for 2013 makes now a prime opportunity for people of all ages to contribute meaningfully to their retirement savings,” advises Diane Morais, Ally Bank Product & Innovation executive.

Looking to boost your retirement readiness securely? Here are some important things to consider:

- The most common IRA plans are Traditional, Roth and Simplified Employee Pension IRAs. Depending on age and taxable income, you could have more than one IRA plan to choose from to help you meet your goals.

- Once you choose an IRA plan, you can typically select from a variety of products, from lower risk savings accounts and certificates of deposit (CDs) to higher risk stocks, bonds and mutual funds.

- For secure growth, consider CDs and online savings accounts. Such products are less risky than stocks. Or roll over existing IRAs, 401(k) or 403(b)s into one IRA with great, stable rates.

- Look beyond branch banks. For example, a bank with no physical locations, such as Ally Bank, can offer competitive rates, low fees, and round-the-clock customer support.

- Be advised, there are restrictions as to how you can add money to IRAs based on age and when you can use the money you’ve saved. Your tax professional can help you determine the best plan for your needs. Above all, look for straightforward retirement products that will help you get closer to your retirement savings goals.

- Don’t be afraid to move around your retirement money to make the most of it. A direct roll over is fairly easy and avoids the tax withholding and associated reporting requirements of a personal withdrawal transaction.

- You can convert your Traditional IRA to a Roth IRA. Beginning in 2010, eligibility requirements based on income and marital status have been eliminated.

Every day you wait is another day your retirement money isn’t actively growing. Whether you’re just getting started or building on your current savings, there’s no time like the present to make a contribution to your retirement account.

Off to the Park? So Is Social Security!

By Phil Walton
Social Security Manager in Toledo, Oh

Now, in the heart of summertime, is your family thinking about spending some fun time with family and friends. So it is fitting that July is both National Vacation Month and National Park and Recreation Month. Going on vacation — whether to visit some of the nation’s great national and state parks or traveling to other fun destinations — doesn’t mean you need to disconnect completely. In fact, our new mobile website makes it easy for you to get the Social Security information you need when you’re on the go. As long as you have an Internet connection, you’re connected to Social Security.

You might not take your laptop with you to a national park, but you’ll probably have your phone. You may be wondering: just how much Social Security business can I do on a smartphone? You may be surprised. We recently released Social Security Mobile to allow for a smoother and more enjoyable online experience for people who want to access www.socialsecurity.gov using a smartphone. Most people who want to access Social Security by smartphone are interested in getting the information they need quickly and efficiently. To accommodate this “grab it on the go” frame of mind, we’ve designed a mobile site that is as easy on the eye as it is to navigate.

Social Security Mobile features 10 items of interest, easily accessible by touching the tiles on your smartphone’s screen. These items include popular topics from our standard website, such as frequently asked questions, Social Security card and number, and publications. For example, you can either read or listen to our entire library of publications on your smartphone. The quick summaries will make it easy to make sure you access the publication you want. As you relax beneath a tree, you may want to use the mobile site’s “decision tree” to help identify documents you need for a new or replacement Social Security card.

Will everything on our website be included in the mobile website? No. Instead, our mobile site is designed to bring you the content you’re most likely to want on the go. Keep in mind that this is not an app you have to download. The website is conveniently designed to run on your smartphone’s browser. You don’t have to download anything from an app store; just visit www.socialsecurity.gov on your smartphone.

Tips to Plan a Family Vacation Close to Home

Special to The Truth

Families are always looking for their next great vacation. And recent studies show that more than three out of four dads wish their family could take more vacations together.

The cost of travel needn’t discourage your family from hitting the road to explore somewhere new. There are many affordable options close to home, and ways to make your journey meet your budget.

Many families are opting to take shorter trips to save on expenses.

Forty-three percent of dads want to spend less than $300 per day on travel, accommodations and entertainment while on a vacation, according to a new Research Now survey commissioned by Great Wolf Lodge.

And 55 percent of dads prefer traveling by car, with 45 percent wanting to travel a distance that is 2-5 hours away, according to the survey.

“When looking for our next affordable summer travel destination, I like to begin with places that are within driving distance,” said Dave Parfitt, founder of AdventuresbyDaddy.com, a nationally known family travel website. “It is often easy to forget how many great destinations, like Great Wolf Lodge, are within a two to three hour drive from home. Plus, without the cost of airfare, families can stretch their vacation budget a little further.”

Pick the Right Place

When taking a family vacation, kids are dad’s top priority. The best way to make a family vacation great for the whole family is to visit a destination that includes activities children find fun and entertaining. Eighty-nine percent of dads say this is extremely or very important, according to the survey.

One type of destination that fits this bill is an indoor water park resort, like Great Wolf Lodge, which has 11 locations throughout North America. Each resort features fun activities for kids and adults, including waterslides and attractions, interactive experiences like MagiQuest, the Scooops Kid Spa and more. Even better, parents can avoid the high cost of airfare.

And since the resorts’ water parks are indoors, families don’t have to worry that a rain shower or cold snap will ruin their travel plans. To learn more about planning a family vacation to an indoor water park resort, visit www.greatwolf.com.

Pack the Car

For extended car rides, it’s important to make the journey as enjoyable as the destination. Be sure to bring healthy snacks and drinks. Pack travel games to help pass the time — the car ride is a great time for family bonding.

So start planning! Your next great family vacation waits.
For too many Ohio children, summer break doesn’t just mean a break from homework; it also means a break from a dependable source of nutritious food. That’s because for more than 800,000 Ohio children, hunger isn’t something that happens in another country. Many of these children come from families that are food insecure—meaning they don’t always know when they’ll get their next meal. These children know how difficult it is to focus on learning while trying to ignore the pangs of an empty stomach.

Thankfully, qualifying children can receive nutrition assistance through free or reduced-price lunches during the academic year. However, when the school cafeterias close for the summer, these children are still in dire need of a nutritious meal or snack.

That’s why the Summer Food Service Program—which provides breakfast, lunch, or a snack for children under 18—is so important. The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and the Ohio Department of Education (ODE) work together to ensure that children have access to the food they need to keep growing and learning during the summer months.

However, too many Ohio families still don’t know about this critical program. In 2011, only 66,000 Ohio children per day utilized the Summer Food Service Program—hundreds of thousands of need and receive nutrition assistance during the school year.

Summer break shouldn’t mean a break from good nutrition. That’s why I’m working to raise awareness and increase access to the program for all Ohio children in low-income families—regardless of where they live.

There are about 1,200 sites across 79 counties that can help. At approved sites, such as schools, summer camps, churches and synagogues, community centers, pools and recreation centers, volunteers and organizations are ensuring our children have the healthy food they need to succeed. And although nine Ohio counties currently lack summer food service program sites, it’s not too late for potential sponsors to set up a program in their town. Interested sponsors and volunteers can still work with the Ohio Department of Education to establish new centers for children to get meals.

But while this is a good start, we can do even more to help. That’s why, a few years ago, I co-hosted a first-of-its-kind hunger summit at the Mid-Ohio Foodbank with leading anti-hunger advocates from across Ohio. Rather than lament a growing problem, we discussed how Ohio stakeholders can work together to increase the number of community leaders, sponsors, volunteers, and sites that can provide children with nutritious meals during both the school year and summer months.

The single biggest thing we can do is to make sure more people know about this program. Outreach and public awareness are critical components to ensure that the end of the school year doesn’t mean an end to healthy meals.

For the most up-to-date list of summer food service program sites, Ohioans should visit the ODE website at https://oh.cnpcares.com/summer/SSFPServByCity.asp, or call the National Hunger Hotline at 1-866-3-HUNGRY or 1-877-8-HAMBRE. Ohioans can also visit my website at www.sherrodbrown.senate.gov for more information and a complete list of county-by-county sites.

The Black Family: Five Decades after the Moynihan Report

Special to The Truth

Nearly five decades later, “The Moynihan Report Revisited,” from the Urban Institute and Fathers Incorporated, gauges how the circumstances of black families have changed and how they compare with other racial and ethnic groups; documents how blacks still suffer from intersecting disadvantages that Moynihan referred to as a “tangle of pathologies”; and suggests ways to improve the circumstances of black families and reduce racial disparities.

Among the findings in “The Moynihan Report Revisited”:

- The statistics that so alarmed Moynihan have only grown worse, not only for blacks, but for whites and Hispanics as well. Today, the share of white children born outside of marriage is about the same as the share was for black children in Moynihan’s day. Meanwhile, the percentage of black children born to unmarried mothers has tripled, remaining far higher than the percentage of white children born to unmarried mothers.

- In 1960, 20 percent of black children lived with their mothers but not their fathers; by 2010, 53 percent of all black children lived in such families. The share of white children living with their mothers but not their fathers climbed to 20 percent in 2010, up from 6 percent in 1960.

- There has been a marked retreat from marriage. In 1960, just over one-half of all black women were married and living with their husbands, compared with over two-thirds of white and Hispanic women. By 2010, only one-quarter of black women, two-fifths of Hispanic women, and one-half of white women lived with their spouses.

- The decline of traditional families occurred across racial and ethnic groups indicates that factors driving the decline do not lie solely within the black community but in the larger social and economic context. Nevertheless, the consequences may be felt disproportionately among blacks as black children are far more likely to be born into and raised in father-absent families than are white children.

- “Reducing the structural barriers to black economic progress, enhancing the incentives to work in the mainstream economy, and improving family dynamics are all important components for reducing racial and ethnic disparities. Addressing those diverse barriers will require concerted governmental, community, and family engagement,” said Gregory Acs, the lead author of “The Moynihan Report Revisited” and director of the Urban Institute’s Income and Benefits Policy Center.

- “It’s such a timely moment to consider in greater depth the economic conditions of black families. These families have always been on the lower rungs of the social and economic ladders. Hopefully, this report will set a new foundation for addressing the circumstances of these and other families in America,” said Kenneth Braswell, executive director of Fathers Incorporated (FI).

As a collaborator, Braswell contributed to the paper along with the Urban Institute’s Margery Austin Turner and former Urban Institute researcher Elaine Sorensen.

“The Moynihan Report Revisited” was funded by the Open Society Foundations’ Campaign for Black Male Achievement.
The Toledo Regional Chamber of Commerce was recently recommended to receive a grant of $428,571 by the Ohio Third Frontier Commission to operate the Third Frontier Internship Program in Northwest Ohio. This program provides reimbursements of up to $3,000 per intern to businesses that employ college students pursuing degrees in high-tech fields.

The grant will be used to place and compensate approximately 128 interns in high-tech positions across Northwest Ohio through a partnership with the Toledo Regional Chamber of Commerce, other chambers of commerce and higher education institutions.

The Ohio Third Frontier is committed to creating new technology-based products, companies, industries and jobs in Ohio. The Ohio Third Frontier Internship program furthered this commitment by developing a pool of talented workers for Ohio companies. This is done by exposing students to the strategies and processes of business environments, and by creating potential employment opportunities following graduation.

The Toledo Regional Chamber of Commerce was previously involved with the Third Frontier Internship Program from 2004 to 2007 as a liaison between businesses in Northwest Ohio and a Dayton-based program administrator. In July 2011, the Chamber was awarded the program and took on the administrative role in this region. Since July 2011, a total of 236 interns have been placed and over $710,000 has been reimbursed to 34 companies in Northwest Ohio.

Businesses and interns interested in registering for this program should visit http://thirdfrontierintern.ohio.gov/3fp/index.php.

For information regarding the program, contact Charlene Page, SBDC Program Manager at the Toledo Regional Chamber of Commerce, page@toledochamber.com or at 419.243.8191.

NAACP Pleased with SCOTUS Ruling Regarding the National Voter Registration Act

In a 7-2 split, SCOTUS Upheld the NVRA in the Arizona v. ITCA Decision

On Monday, the NAACP released the following statement in response to the Supreme Court ruling that Arizona’s proof of citizenship requirement is preempted by the federal law requiring states use the federal voter registration form:

“State government should encourage voting, not discourage it,” stated NAACP President and CEO Benjamin Todd Jealous. “The Supreme Court made the right decision to strike down Arizona’s proof-of-citizenship law. We need to find innovative ways to make voting easier and more accessible for Americans, rather than coming up with new ways to suppress it.”

“Any victory for the National Voter Registration Act is a victory for our voters,” said Jotaka Eaddy, senior director, Voting Rights. “Today’s decision reafirms the importance of the National Voter Registration Act. It is a victory for voters and our Democracy.”

Tips for Small Business Owners

It’s all about spending the time and money to design an easy-to-use website and to continually communicate new information via social media. Once you start a dialogue with your customers via Facebook or Twitter, you need to keep it up. You can’t start and stop, and use social media sporadically. Online marketing needs to be a continual process, say experts.

New Expenditures

While the economy may be taking a turn for the better, traditional lenders have not made funds more easily accessible. As a result, direct access to capital remains tight for many small business owners, making it harder to fund the marketing projects necessary for survival.

“Alternative financing rescues many small businesses facing tough times because these options are often easier to qualify for than their conventional counterparts,” says Stephen Sheinbaum, CEO of Merchant Cash and Capital, an organization that provides funding to small businesses.

If you’re short on capital, consider an alternative with more relaxed restrictions on credit history and fewer paperwork requirements. For example, a Merchant Cash Advance (MCA) is gaining popularity as a financing option. MCAs have no collateral requirements and are extraordinarily flexible because borrowers don’t have to spell out what the money is being used for and repayment can be based off credit card sales, monthly gross revenue or through several other measurements.

Small business owners can look to their forebears for guidance in many ways. But when it comes to overcoming today’s new technical and financial challenges, the successful entrepreneurs will be the trail blazers.
Keep Kids Healthy And Active While School Is Out

Parents like you know kids should eat healthy and be active every day, but summer break can often make that hard. With some fun, simple tips, you can ensure summer break doesn’t mean a break in your family’s healthy habits.

The Problem

Without the benefit of scheduled meals, snacks and recess provided during the school day, some kids fall into a “summer slump” of unhealthy behaviors, such as spending more time indoors watching TV, playing video games, and snacking on less-healthy foods.

Childhood obesity is at its height in the summer months. Indeed, studies show that kids gain weight more than twice as fast in the summer as they do during the regular school year.

This makes summer an important time for families to pledge to be active and eat healthy together.

Fun, Simple Solutions

- The Network for a Healthy California (Network) is on the front lines of the battle against obesity and works to empower everyone to lead healthier, active lives. The Network has partnered with summer activity programs to launch the “Power Up Your Summer!” Challenge. The Challenge encourages kids and their families to get at least 60 minutes of active play every day and to fill half of each plate with fruits and vegetables.

What You Can Do

Try these simple ideas to help your kids beat the summer slump:

- Find safe outdoor places for kids to play, such as parks, recreation centers and pools.
- Don’t let the heat slow you down. Dancing and hide-and-seek are great indoor activities.
- Limit TV and computer time to less than two hours per day.
- Involve the whole family in reaching a goal of 60 minutes of play every day.
- Fill half your plate with summer fruits and vegetables at every meal. Choose in-season fruits and vegetables, which often cost less.
- Rethink your drink and choose water instead of sugary drinks.
- Be a good role model. Your kids are more likely to make healthy choices— if you do, too.

We all want to raise our kids to be the best they can be. Healthy habits, such as eating fruits and vegetables, drinking water and being active every day, are the building blocks to success. You can help kids see that healthy choices can be fun choices.

You can find resources, tips and healthy recipes at www.CuChampionsForChange.net or www.facebook.com/NetworkForAHealthyCalifornia.
I made a Facebook status recently saying that I think Muhammad Ali should be regarded as one of hip-hop’s founding fathers. I was completely serious.

He free-styled off the dome in the middle of a crowd, before there were freestyle ciphers.

He had battle rhymes for his opponents before there was a such thing as ‘rap beef’.

He was the polarizing figure of his day. He was in a battle with the powers that be.

His stance on issues became so influential that he had to be neutralized.

If Nas stood on the shoulders of Grandmaster Flash, surely those early 80s rappers were in some way standing on Ali’s shoulders… although he was a sports icon instead of a musician. What is a black musician? What is black music?

Before Negro spirituals, before Negro’s were ever taught to speak English… what was black music?

In Africa we had the drum. It was a way to keep time and communicate messages.

Seriously, do you think it’s just coincidence that we have the rhythm we do or that we like deep bass as much as we do? No, this has been with us for centuries. It’s native to us.

Able to be heard across great distances, various drums and other percussion instruments allowed us to talk to each other while out in the elements. Like Morse code.

Once the Europeans captured, transported and enslaved us, they taught us to talk to each other as if each was separated from our language and customs.

Simple communication through sound or words became an impossible barrier.

On top of the horror of being bought, sold, beaten, raped and forced into hard labor.

We eventually pieced together scraps of the English language, obviously broken English but enough to put thought into word. During the time in the fields, slaves sang work songs. Some came from us, some were taught to us by our masters as a way to make us more agreeable to our captivity. That’s right, even back then we couldn’t control our own creative output entirely without someone stepping in to capitalize.

As slaves found religion, Negro spirituals became our primary music.

From gospel to blues, then jazz to rock & roll.

Not out of a need to entertain, but a need to express what we weren’t allowed to say.

Not out of a need to gain, but a need to communicate with each other as if each call and response song was an actual conversation.

Music has been vital to us from the very start.

It’s a proven fact that Elvis Presley based his sound and style off of black southern musicians. The man who became the biggest music artist on the planet, was just doing what he saw black folks do.

Slavery may have been over, but the mid 20th Century saw countless incidents of African Americans robbed of their ability to earn off of their own creations. Rock & roll was literally stolen from us. Research it. It’s true.

But bigger than us having our ability to communicate with each other and express what life is like to each other, we now had the ability to control aspects of our creative process and business that we never had before. Rap music was a blessing. Still is.

The golden era of hip-hop (1986 to 1992) didn’t just save rap, it saved black music overall. Hard edged street lyrics continued the legacy started by Marvin Gaye’s “What’s Going On” album.

House party anthems picked up where disco died by providing younger people with an outlet for all that energy. Hip-hop needed to be raw, honest, and hopeful because that is exactly what the conditions the people were living in made them feel like. Hip-hop became a giant mirror held up to Uncle Sam’s face, so he could see what his policies and neglect had created. We had no story, no narrative.

Even though R&B and soul music dominated the charts, there wasn’t a precedent established for black artists to express their literal reality via song until hip-hop.

Now here we are decades later.

There’s still important music being made but the fans are so exhausted by the bull they won’t even buy or support the artists actually informing them.

We have a jaded fan mentality that expects the worse when years ago, music listeners depended on artists the same way patients do doctors.

If I could challenge you to do anything this Black Music Month of June, it would be to find some black music that you feel lucky listening to.

Go Youtube some X Clan. Go through your Nas collection.

Listen to that “New Slaves” by Kanye that I wrote about.

Some Dead Prez, Mos Def, Erykah Badu.

Some Ice T, Public Enemy, Ice Cube.

Some Kendrick Lamar, Stalley, Jay Z.

I could go on and on (to da break of dawn) about your options, you should know them.

But remembering you have options is the point.

And most of all, remembering that music is expression and for black people it carries a heavy message. Even the silliest, most ratchet club banger out this year could possibly give you some insight on where we’ve been and what we’ve been through as a people.

That drum is still talking to us, we just have to learn how to listen to what’s really being said.

Over 200 people – fathers, families, children – gathered on June 15 at Central Catholic High School to participate in the third annual Fatherhood Walk.

The walkers chanted their way through two mile trek through the neighborhood surrounding Central Catholic with the now-familiar refrain – “What do you need?” “Fathers!” “When do you need them?” “Now!”
