“Our goal is to change the face of public housing by providing quality affordable housing within a green community. We support HUD’s national initiative to change the perception of public housing and encourage everyone in our community to ‘ReThink Public Housing.’”
Clap your hands everybody! Clap your hands everybody! For the first time in the history of Toledo, it appears that there will be five African Americans on City Council. This, despite a perfect storm where, in the opinion of one high-profile local businessman, “the best strong mayor we’ve ever had was defeated by an opponent who ran the most dishonest campaign I’ve seen.”

Indeed, Mayor-elect D. Michael Collins has struggled to gain political traction with less than a month before he officially takes office. Not only has he shown a remarkable inability to grasp the importance of being sensitive to how African Americans feel about the police department, he is seen as pushing to hire an economic director at an astronomical salary without first thinking about how the position would be paid for.

“In terms of political calculations, he’s not good at it,” reasoned one longtime political sage. “He has one trick in his bag. If there were something he wanted, he would talk about it on the record ad nauseum. But that is his only tactic. He doesn’t talk to people behind the scenes. He doesn’t use the media outside of what picks up his loquacious speeches. I really feel like he doesn’t have good political stability. So Council, certainly with its new makeup, I think can out-maneuver this guy pretty easily if they can coalesce.”

Can the five black council members unite as “intimate friends” around a diversity agenda? Will the “chocolate compact” solidify their strength in order to keep Collins sensitive to racial issues? Or will the fledgling federation ultimately be known as the “Fragile Five” rather than the “Fabulous Five,” in the eyes of the black community?

I spoke with Larry Sykes, who is expected to occupy the final council seat on January 2, about this very topic.

Perryman: Will you be part of a Jack Ford-led coalition on City Council or will you be independent? And do you see the five blacks on council uniting on some things or will they pretty much all go in different directions?

Sykes: I cannot speak for anyone else and I don’t know anything about a Jack Ford-led coalition because I have not spoken to Jack about that. I can only speak from my perspective. I can and will work with anyone.

Perryman: I understand that’s an at-large seat and you garnered support in spite of the unions’ opposition, but I think that you were more visible in African-American churches than any other candidate. So what will be your connection to those people who supported you and really, took you over the top in the counting of the provisional ballots?

Sykes: No, I thank you guys for letting me in your churches and I don’t just come during election time. When I go back to the community, that’s who I listen to. That’s my constituency and I have to do what I think they want me to do and what is right. So if the community goes to Jack or Theresa [Gabriel] and say hey this is what we want, you need to go call Larry and we say this is the way we are going to do it. This situation is a perfect storm, but how are we going to weather the storm? Are all of us together in this boat or are we all going to go down? Do you understand what I’m saying?

Perryman: Please elaborate.

Sykes: I just said that there are five African Americans on City Council. So we need to sit down and say hey guys, what else can I support, what did I support you with, where can we support you so that we can be a force to reckon with. Now will that happen? We had three African Americans on the school board and we couldn’t get together, so I don’t know. The question is can we get together?

Perryman: That’s the question.

Sykes: The question is, who is going to do great things or who will bend to labor? I don’t owe anything to labor!

Perryman: Who’s likely to bend?

Sykes: I can’t say.

Perryman: Then tell me who won’t bend? Will Jack Ford bend to labor?

Sykes: He doesn’t have to. He doesn’t need labor to get elected.

Perryman: Labor didn’t support you and they didn’t support Ford. So will you and Jack work together?

Sykes: I will work with anybody for the common good.

Perryman: What are your thoughts on the mayor-elect and his lack of racial sensitivity and understanding of diversity?

Sykes: I keep an open mind. People campaign and often, as with me, people misunderstand what people say and I’m a forgiving person. Maybe, what he said wasn’t what he meant at that time, I don’t really know that. I think he will have an opportunity to work with very diverse, very knowledgeable and experienced normal people. And I think he will respect all of them and we all can learn from one another.

Perryman: I must admit that I get a bit nervous, particularly when we turn back the clock on some things to a perspective honed and developed in the...
Well, it may be high time for churches and pastors to pay up and start either working a second job or have their congregations up their income to cover residential housing expenses.

A federal judge in the Western District of Wisconsin in the case of Freedom from Religion Foundation, Inc. vs. Lew and Werfel, (Google it) recently ruled that 26 U.S.C. section 107 of the IRS violates the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment.

In everyday parlance that means unless the decision is overruled, churches will not be able to pay their pastors a sum certain as and for their housing allowance and that amount also being exempt from personal taxation.

The court opined that such an exemption is limited strictly to pastors and thus is not a benefit to others who are not pastors and as such violates the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment.

It is good because those who profess a faith in their respective religions and especially in the Christian faith benchmark that God is their source and supply, the pastors and their assemblies (unless the decision is overturned) will have to now walk by that faith and not by sight (aka: trusting in and relying upon IRS tax exemptions).

It means that churches and their pastors will have to re-negotiate their compensation packages to see if the churches can continue to slice and dice a piece of the pastor’s compensation so that it can be exempt from taxes... if that slice is used for their personal housing.

And why should that slice be exempt? If you are a pastor of a particular denomination, you are asking the tax code and the other tax payers to subsidize your religious beliefs by letting you have tax free monies to live in a house of your choosing or monies be applied towards your parsonage house (if your church provides such a dwelling).

If you walk by faith, do you really want the IRS to be in bed with you as to how your church spends it funds for the benefit and care of its pastoral staff?

If you claim that God is your all in all and that He is your source and supply, why not live the talk and walk the walk and tell the IRS that you do not need their tax coverage in order for you to propagate the gospel?

I contend that a lot of shills and con artists can get a 501(c) (3) exemption, register with the state as a minister of the gospel and Viola! They can set up a “church” that will have those under their pastoral care paying monies to them for their housing and thus avoiding IRS taxes.

I never was clear why the church loves the state so much until you realize that the state gives the church tax exemptions on property and income and other valuable holdings to the tune of billions and billions of dollars nationwide.

It is almost unthinkable to many churches and pastors that this cozy relationship should not continue as it is.

As a reminder to those who may be in shock, you do not need to incorporate with the state or the IRS in order to form what is colloquially known as a “church.” (Note: the church is composed of the believers...not the building that they assemble in).

You can be an unincorporated voluntary association and thus do not need a 501(c) (3) unless of course you want your members to receive a tax deduction for their charitable donations to their house of worship.

Question: how much less giving would occur if your house of worship did not have a tax exempt ID number? Would you give the same, less or more?

If you could not write off on your taxes at the end of the year, hundreds or thousands of dollars in tithes and offerings, would you still attend that house of worship or would it benefits be diminished because there was no longer a taxable financial gain for you?

Churches and pastors do not need the IRS or the myriad of tax breaks that it gives to religious organizations in order for them to propagate the faith. If pastors and churches want to be free from “Caesar” and proclaim the gospel, they are able to do so without getting or needing an exemption to live in a house or to cover their car costs.

What a profound statement of faith it would be for Presbyterians and Episcopalians and Baptists and Lutherans and Methodists and other religious organizations to make a stand and renounce any involvement with the IRS which is the revenue-gathering arm of our present day “Caesar.”

I see the modern-day church married to the IRS and because the church is not strong enough to see the deception (or does not want to see it) involved in such an illicit relationship, do not expect either party to be filing divorce papers against the other.

Reversing the Poverty Trend

By Jay Black
The Truth Contributor

In this week’s article we continue the series on why our community is amongst the poorest communities in America and what we can do to reverse the trend. We offer reasons 4 through 3 today.

TAACC Mission Statement

The Toledo African American Chamber of Commerce (TAACC) advocates and promotes the economic growth and development of African American owned businesses by focusing on the development of business opportunities, business alliances, and legislative advocacy.

Reason Number 4. Education. This reason is a complement to reason 6 which we discussed previously (ignorance or lack of knowledge). Dictionary.com defines education as “the act or process of imparting or acquiring general knowledge, developing the powers of reasoning and judgment, and generally of preparing oneself or others intellectually for mature life.”

Many in the African-American community do not place a premium on academic achievement. While it does not guarantee success it does guarantee at least personal achievement. How, you might ask? Attainment of a quality education helps to prepare one intellectually and, most importantly, no one can ever take away what you’ve achieved. What you do with what you’ve attained academically is up to you. Why is this issue so important to our community?

• A lack of education is often used as a reason for denial of employment opportunities.
• The completion of college continues to be one of the single best predictors of success in the workforce.
• It has been consistently reported that a person with a college degree can expect to earn approximately $1 million dollars more than a high school graduate over a life time.
• African-American (AA) and Latino children are less likely to be able to compete on the global stage than children from other groups (Asians and whites). One study showed that the persistent gaps in academic achievement between children in the U.S. and their counterparts in other countries have deprived the U.S. economy of as much as $2.3 trillion dollars in economic output in 2008. This number has likely grown in subsequent years.

LMHA Celebrates 80 Years of Opportunity During Annual Meeting

Special to The Truth

Established four years before President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the 1937 United States Housing Act, LMHA (originally known as Toledo Metropolitan Housing Authority – TMHA) has provided thousands of low to moderate-income families and the elderly with affordable housing, programs and/or services.

In November, dozens of LMHA supporters gathered at the Toledo Club to celebrate 80 years of service to the community.

The Toledo-area based housing authority stands at the forefront as one of the first public housing facilitators in the United States. In addition to its Brand Whitlock Homes, named after the former Toledo mayor, was the first housing development built in Toledo in 1938.

Due to the success of this project, other housing developments immediately followed, including Brand Whitlock Extension, Birmingham Terrace and Golden Age Village (now known as Glendale Terrace) — the first housing community of its kind in the United States designed specifically for seniors. Over its eight-decade existence, LMHA has expanded its number of housing developments to more than two dozen.

LMHA currently has approximately 2,740 Public Housing units and issues a total of 4,300 vouchers through its Housing Choice Voucher Program. Collingwood Green Senior Building, its newest development, consists of a 65-unit senior mid-rise building. This is the first of four phases that will encompass 272 units of new mixed-income/mixed-rental units, and the construction of 7 single family affordable homes (approximately 1200-1400 sq. ft., ea.) with market-rate homeownership options.

“Our current development, Collingwood Green, is the flagship for green and sustainable housing near downtown Toledo,” said Executive Director Linnie Willis. “Our goal is to change the face of public housing by providing quality affordable housing within a green community. We support HUD’s national initiative to change the perception of public housing and encourage everyone in our community to “Re-Think Public Housing.”

Enrollment Continues for the Affordable Care Act

By Kim Phillips
The Truth Contributor

President Barack Obama has seen his approval rating plummet to a career low as a result of the botched rollout of the Affordable Care Act. Skepticism of the ACA is one of the drivers of Obama’s troubles. American’s by nearly 2-1, disapprove of his handling of the implementation of rollout of the new healthcare law. Public opinion polls indicate that 57 percent of Americans are now in opposition to the new law overall.

As a result of the issues with the rollout of the healthcare.gov website, individuals will have an additional six weeks to enroll in coverage until March 31, 2014 and avoid new tax penalties.

What is the administration doing to “fix” the website? There is a separate hardware team doing upgrades to increase the website’s capacity, to handle 800,000 separate visits per day. The software team is fixing bugs and attempting to make the site more user friendly.

Small business owners will have to wait until November 2014 to sign up online to enroll their employees. They will be able to compare plans online, however, they will have to use paper applications and use an insurance broker or agent unless they are in a handful of states that has their small business exchanges up and running. The top priority for the administration is to make the website work for customers.

What can you expect when you enroll on the website: you will fill out an application and see all the health plans available in your area. You will provide some information about your household size and income to find out if you can get lower costs on your monthly premiums for private insurance plans.

You will also find out if you qualify for free or low-cost coverage available through Medicaid or Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP).

Insurance plans in the Marketplace are offered by private companies. They cover the same core set of benefits called essential health benefits. No health plan can turn you away or charge you more because you have an illness or medical condition known as pre-existing limits. They must cover treatments for these conditions. Plans can’t charge women more than men for the same plan. Many preventive services such as routine physicals are covered at no cost to you.

The Marketplace will simplify your search for health coverage by gathering the options available in your area in one place. You can compare plans based on price, benefits, and other features important to you before you make a choice. Plans will be presented in five categories – bronze, silver, gold, platinum and catastrophic – to make comparing them easier.

In the Marketplace, information about prices and benefits will be written in simple language. You get a clear picture of what premiums you’d pay and what benefits and protections you’d get before you enroll. Compare plans based on what’s important to you, and choose the combination of price and coverage that fits your needs and budget.

Note: Premium amounts in this tool are only examples, based on a limited set of sample ages and scenarios. They may not fully reflect your individual situation. Actual plan pricing can change based on your household size, ages, and tobacco use, and your costs may be lower based on your income. You’ll get final quotes for specific plans based on your income and household after you complete a Marketplace application.

Plans and prices are now available at www.healthcare.gov. Coverage begins as soon as January 1, 2014 and Open Enrollment ends March 31, 2014.

Gifts from the Kitchen

By Patrice Powers-Barker, OSU Extension, Lucas County
The Truth Contributor

Why pay more money for convenience items from the store? It’s easy to make your own mixes for instant soups, warm winter drinks or non-salt seasonings. You could package these food gifts to give to others and you can make a batch for yourself. Give yourself the gift of time during this busy time of year!

What Kinds of Recipes to Use? Look for recipes with all dry ingredients such as: uncooked rice or pasta, dry cereal, pretzels, dry legumes or split peas, nuts, dry milk, flour, sugar, spices & herbs. None of these ingredients will have to be refrigerated or frozen.

If this is a gift, what would the recipient like best? For example, a young family might enjoy a quick snack mix while the family member watching their sodium level would like a tasty, low-sodium spice blend. Test out new recipes to make sure that the item tastes good, and the instructions are easy to follow. You might find a new easy, favorite recipe for yourself!

Stretch your food dollar at the grocery stores by comparing the costs of store brands to national brands. Only use coupons if it will help you save money on an item you would use. Compare the cost of larger versers smaller sizes of food containers.

As in any food preparation, clean and sanitize the work area before assembling the ingredients. Always wash hands with warm soap and water and make sure that food storage containers are clean and completely dry before adding the dry ingredients.

When storing dry food mixes to prepare at a later time, make sure you are using a container designed for food. Food safe containers include glass canning jars and containers that have already held food and have been washed out or zip top bags designed to hold food. Avoid containers with toxic metals, such as lead, copper or brass.

The following recipe is an easy recipe for corn bread by Julie Gardner-Robinson and Kendra Otto of North Dakota State University Extension Service. In addition to recipes, they also share a list of low-cost gift ideas for friends and family. It can be found at http://www.ag.ndsu.edu/pubs/ytfoods/fn1494.pdf.

Recipe card to include with the previously made dry mix)

Homemade Cornbread Mix (dry ingredients)

1 egg
1 c. water
2 Tbsp. oil

Preheat oven to 425 degrees. Pour dry mix into a large bowl. In a second bowl, combine egg, water and oil. Add liquid ingredients to dry ingredients. Stir well. Pour into an 8- by 8-inch greased baking pan and bake for 20 to 25 minutes until the top is golden brown. For best flavor, use this mix within nine months.

Tis the Season….

By Angela Steward, Fitness Motivator
The Truth Contributor

Okay the holidays are here, tis the season to celebrate and like me I bet you have a lot of parties on your holiday calendar. I have something scheduled each and every weekend between Thanksgiving and Christmas! Christmas parties, birthday parties, anniversary parties, etc., so weight gain here I come!

I love the Christmas season! I partake in all of the festivities and I especially enjoy eating the yummy holiday foods I love so much! So, of course, during this festive time of year, I gain a few (lol) pounds, and this year is no different. I don’t believe in depriving myself of my favorite holiday foods and I’m certainly not going to turn down a slice of my sister-in-law’s German chocolate cake (even though she didn’t fix it yet...hint,hint), or my husband’s shrimp salad, or my mother’s homemade yeast rolls. I’ve gained two more pounds just thinking about it!

So with that being said, even though I gain a few pounds during the holidays, I would probably gain more if I didn’t have a Holiday Game Plan. Yes, I go into the holiday season with a plan—knowing I will probably gain “some” weight, but not enough to go up a dress size!

I know, I know, some people say its this and that curbs cravings - so don’t deprive yourself, eat the foods you love – in moderation by using my Holiday Game Plan. After losing 70 pounds, I know my body better than anyone. I love to eat and by using the steps above, and by staying active and using self-control during the holidays, I can enjoy my holiday dishes, without guilt. You can too!! My Holiday Game Plan allows you to be realistic about holiday weight gain and can help you to avoid having to make weight loss resolutions in 2014.

1. Eat the foods you love, but in smaller portions. No, I don’t carry measuring spoons in my purse – I refuse to live “my” life under pressure, and you shouldn’t either! A tablespoon of this and that curbs cravings - so don’t deprive yourself, eat the foods you love – in moderation by using my motto: Eat to Live, Not Live to Eat!

2. For every alcoholic drink, drink a glass of water. No explanation needed, right?

3. Say “no thank you” often!

4. Try to avoid second servings! For me, it really depends on what it is…!! German chocolate cake...one slice now, I’ll take another slice for later!!! Sissy-in-law-!!

5. Move your body every day, all day! I exercise daily: I walk, I dance, I lift weights, I squat, I jump (in moderation), I ride my bike! You gotta move it – to lose it!

6. Don’t eat hungry - eat throughout the day! Don’t wait until you’re starving to eat, waiting to eat until you’re hungry leads to overeating. Eat small meals throughout the day – it will help control cravings and mindless snacking.

7. Pace yourself – no speed eating! Eat your meals slowly, not to the point that you’re counting how many times you chew, but slow down enough to hear that small voice telling you “I’m full.” That’s why its so easy for most of us to overeat while socializing, we’re so busy talking and laughing while enjoying our meal, we can’t hear our inner voice screaming “I’m full!”

8. Get out of the kitchen, or wherever food is sitting! I’m a mindless muncher. I don’t munch because I’m hungry, I munch because its there.

9. Drink water every day, all day. Don’t wait until you’re thirsty to drink water.

10. When hosting parties, get rid of leftovers, it frees you from temptation.

Merry Christmas to you and all you love!!

Kwanzaa 2013-2014
Presented by
The Toledo Kwanzaa House
December 4, 2013
Dear Ryan,

With the holidays right around the corner I’m getting nervous because I seem to over indulge and gain a lot of the weight back that I have lost during the year. It seems like I spend the whole year trying to lose weight just to gain it back again over the holiday season. Do you have any suggestions on how I can keep from gaining a ton of weight back this year?

Dear Kim,

This is a very difficult time of year for everyone including myself. I mean who wants to say no to all the holiday goodies laying around the house or at work.

For starters you can just simply not buy the junk food when you go grocery shopping. It’s hard to pass it up when you are walking through the store but it’s even harder or impossible to pass it up when it’s in your house and in your face all day long.

Another thing that will help you is to eat your regular meals on the holiday itself. A lot of people don’t eat, thinking that they are going to be eating a large meal later that day and then they over eat. If you eat like it’s just a regular day you will be less likely to overeat because you will not be starving by the time you feast begins.

Remember you should be eating four to six meals per day and not just one big meal and then another big one when your hunger sets in again four hours later. This is where people really mess their eating up and then they do it for the next couple of days with leftovers.

You must stick to your eating plan and not over eat just because it’s there. Drink your gallon of water like you should be doing anyways and carry on as normal. The only difference is you will have family around and more food for you to splurge on.

You must show some discipline and self-control here. Don’t eat as much of the potatoes, dressing, pastas and other starchy carbs on the table. Have some but go easy, fill up on more meat and veggies this year.

You could also make a dessert that is low sugar and/or low fat that you can enjoy while everyone else is indulging in the high fat, high calorie and high sugar desserts that will halt your fat loss efforts. I always make a cheese cake that’s virtually fat free and sugar free. Everyone loves it and doesn’t know it is reduced until I tell them. Use sugar-free jello, puddings, low or no fat cream cheese and modify recipes to fit your needs. I also add protein powder to my desserts; it tastes great and reduces your insulin spikes.

Don’t be a victim this holiday, get creative and eat healthy. Also, keep your exercise program moving along. The last thing you want to do is decrease your calorie burning while increasing your calorie intake. This is where you will begin to pack on more pounds.

I know with the holiday parties your time may get limited but you have to stay on point and make time to train. Be strong! Your friends and family will tempt you, but show them you are stronger than their unsolicited coaxing.

While we continue to improve HealthCare.gov, it’s important to remember that there are other ways to enroll in the Health Insurance Marketplace. One way is to find help in your local community. You can get assistance in a number of different ways: through trained navigators, in-person assistance personnel, or through certified application counselors.

To date, more than 19,000 assistants have been trained by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services. We estimate that, since October 1, they’ve reached over 450,000 consumers.

Our navigator, in-person assistant, and certified application counselor programs are critical tools to provide consumers with in-person help. Each assistant undergoes a rigorous training process, to include privacy training, and is tested to ensure they’re prepared to help you enroll in the Marketplace.

Assistors are already having a tremendous impact helping folks enroll all across the country. In Oklahoma, Little Dixie Community Action Agency’s staff of 65 trained navigators operates in 80 percent of the state’s counties. The work is an extension of the agency’s mission to serve lower income families.

Chad Austin, Little Dixie’s Project Coordinator, told us that, once consumers get the right information from assisters, they see the advantage to their “bottom line costs.” Chad has first-hand experience with the benefits of the assister programs. The first person he helped through the entire application process was someone he helped on his own time during off hours at home. Who was this important first client? Chad’s wife.

Community health centers are also playing a crucial role in the enrollment process. There are trained enrollment assisters at nearly every community health center in the country. Community health centers already treat more than 21 million Americans each year, and, as more uninsured Americans enter the health insurance market for the first time, they will continue to play a crucial role in delivering care.

Thanks to the Affordable Care Act, 300 new community health center sites are being built, and nearly 600 clinics are being renovated.

Finally, in some metropolitan areas, there are trained Enrollment Assistance Teams and Enrollment Assistance Centers staffed by trained personnel who are available to help people with the enrollment process.

Together, in-person assisters and community health centers are working to educate Americans about the choices they have in the new Health Insurance Marketplace, many of whom will have health insurance for the first time.

You sure had lots of choices.

Plan A or Plan B? This one or that? It was a big decision and you made it with as much information as you could find. Now you hope you’ve gotten the healthcare coverage that works best for you and your family.

But what if there was no option, or that healthcare was days away, dispensed in a tent with little technology? In the book Band-Aid for a Broken Leg by Damien Brown, you’ll read about one doctor’s experiences, literally in the field.

Growing up in relative affluence, Damien Brown only had the barest notion of hardship until he was in his 20s. By then, he’d lived on several different continents, had seen the effects of misery and poverty, and had decided that he “wanted to help. Or at least try, in some capacity.”

So, following graduation from med school in Australia, he signed on with Médecins Sans Frontiéres (MSF) and was sent to Mavinga, Angola, on Africa’s southwest side. It would be his home for six months.

Dubbed The Edge of the World by Portuguese colonists, Mavinga was little more than a collection of dusty buildings and tents surrounded by land mines. Brown’s job was to relieve the doctor whose stint was up but, never having been in charge of a hospital before, he was terrified.

It didn’t go well at first.

Brown didn’t speak Portuguese, and the language barrier gave his staff extra reason to complain about Novo Doctor. The illnesses he saw were things he’d only ever read about before. Patient treatment was hampered by lack of x-rays, oxygen machines, and modern testing; and a near-primitive surgery suite with hand-operated equipment. Improvisation was common, sanitariness was often an issue and, between adrenaline-rush emergencies, there was incredible boredom.

Six months. That’s all Brown signed on for and he counted the days – until he suddenly realized that things were better. His colleagues had become friends and his time in Mavinga was up too soon. From there, he “slid finally into Melbourne” and a hospital with modern equipment.

This is the kind of book that will open your conscience – and maybe your wallet. It’s jaw-dropping and humorous, both. And if you’d love a story about a life you may never lead in a place you may never visit, Band-Aid for a Broken Leg is a good choice.

You might think for a minute that Band-Aid for a Broken Leg would be like those commercials you see on TV, filled with misery meant to touch your heart.

And you’d be wrong.

Oh, there’s heart-touching here, yes. Author Damien Brown doesn’t miss a chance to share the mind-boggling things he saw, but we’re also privy to the goodness, too. That makes this book a nice balance between suffering that will make you very thankful for what you’ve got, and grace and forbearance that will make you smile.

dployment rate in the Caucasian community locally.

What must we do to reverse these trends in the AA community?

1. We need to understand that there is a direct correlation between wealth-building opportunities and education. We are limiting our economic earning potential when we don’t place the proper emphasis on academic achievement/attainment.

2. Parents/guardians need to play a more active role in their child’s educational experience. This means ramping up their involvement in the process to the point that it is their number one priority. It also means attending every parents/teachers conference, helping the child with their homework, attending every extra-curricular activity that your child is involved in, demanding academic excellence from your child by keeping your expectations high, and being actively involved in your child’s school system to help you produce a better product.

3. Challenge your pastor to work with other pastors to develop programs that will support the development of academic excellence and economic empowerment opportunities for our children.

Reason Number 3. Complacency. Some say that our infatuation with assimilating into mainstream America has caused us to become complacent to the point that there is very little unity left in our community. We were once forced to work with and rely on each other. In other words, we were all that we had.

Now that the civil rights movement (as we knew it) is dead, we’ve lost sight as a community of the importance of working together on issues that are important to our growth and prosperity. We have a false sense of security now that we’ve assimilated. While we may be doing fine individually, I would venture to guess that most in our whole family (nieces, nephews, cousins, and in-laws, etc.) and our brothers and sisters in the church (not church) are not. Perhaps we are this way because we have an AA president, or an AA mayor (at least for a few more days), or an AA police chief and Latino fire chief, or an AA public school superintendent, 3 AA’s on the TPS school board, and the prospects of up to 5 AA’s on Toledo City Council, and other AA’s or Latino elected officials in prominent positions.

We have certainly come a long way in this country and in this community, but there is still one problem. We are still amongst the poorest, most uneducated, most unemployed, most incarcerated, have the lowest life expectancy, and one of the highest teen pregnancy and abortion rates of all groups. So the question becomes why are we still so complacent?

A recent example is our embarrassing voter turnout in last month’s local election. Some still feel that their vote doesn’t matter since “they are going to put into office who they want”. I still haven’t figured out who the “they” are whenever someone makes this statement to me. City Council Candidate Larry Sykes currently leads by a mere five votes for the final seat on Council! So much for your vote not being important. The danger in remaining complacent as a community is that we lose the gains that so many of our ancestors died for us to have. In fact we are losing ground in several areas.

How do we reverse this trend?

1. Remember the past. Revisit our history in this country, how we got here and how far we’ve come (and more importantly, how far we have to go). We must never lose sight of the tremendous price our parents and ancestors paid to provide us with the opportunities we have today.

2. Appreciate and take advantage of the opportunities that we do have. No longer is it illegal for African-Americans to read and attain an education. We can now go to most schools and universities in the U.S. No longer is it unlawful for us to own real property. We can now live in most communities in America. No longer is it illegal for us to own/operate businesses and it is ok for us to support AA businesses.

3. There are plenty of government-sponsored and private sector business opportunities that are available to us that we don’t take advantage of (academic scholarships, internship programs, the State of Ohio 15 percent set aside on goods and services, being a member of TAACC, taking advantage of the services offered by David Wood at the local Minority Business Assistance Center, enrolling in Assets Toledo if you want to start a business, etc.). It is not against the law to access any of these opportunities.

4. We used to be a community that believed in being our “brother’s keeper”. We once cared more about the overall well-being of our community than we did about our own; recognizing that as the community prospered, we would do well. We once believed in the principle of reaching back to help ensure the success of others in the AA community. It is essential that we get back to these beliefs and practices.

Next week we will reveal the top two reasons the black community is amongst the poorest in America.
Movie Review: The Best Man Holiday

By Michael Hayes
Minister of Culture

“I feel like he’s raping my emotions.”

That’s the sentence someone close to me used to describe how Tyler Perry approaches serious dramatic moments in his films.

Whether it happens to be the unspeakable horror of throwing toddlers out of windows (as was the case in Perry’s rendition of For Colored Girls) or abruptly killing off a main character and inexplicably replacing him with Dwayne ‘The Rock’ Johnson (as was the case in Perry’s Why Did I Get Married Too) … either way, it feels forced and sloppy.

The kind of jaw-dropping twists that work in a stage play don’t translate well to motion pictures.

It’s supposed to feel seamless.

Malcolm D. Lee’s Best Man Holiday is not only a triumphant return to quality black cinema, but it also serves as a message in film making seemingly intended for the likes of Tyler Perry.

Don’t get me wrong, I defend Tyler Perry on most occasions and consider him to offer much more good than harm when it comes to the Madea character and all his movies. But Black Hollywood has its traditions just as Hollywood has theirs, and the art of storytelling doesn’t let anyone off the hook so this sequel is the equivalent of Lee handing Perry a copy of “Dramatic Black Films FOR DUMMIES” complete with footnotes and highlighted areas of interest.

Do you know how long ago The Best Man came out?

The World Trade Center twin towers were still standing, Aaliyah was still ruling the charts and Bill Clinton was still president.

To even think ofreviving a storyline more than 10 years after its conclusion says a lot about the impact it made. Anyone who reads my column often may remember I recently counted down the Top 10 Black Romantic Comedies of All Time and even alluded to the early 2000’s as a golden-era or hey day for the genre. We had it good back then, didn’t we y’all? Love Jones, Love & Basketball, The Wood…etc.

It was as if that time period was so perfect that its lasting legacy should never be disturbed because it just wouldn’t be worth the risk. That’s right, just like Jordan getting that sixth ring against Utah… let’s just end it on a high note and let that moment live on in our memories. Don’t mess it up by coming back and attempting the unthinkable, undoable, inconceivable and so forth.

Well, I’m here to tell you… The Best Man Holiday was worth risking that legacy because it achieves perfect balance.

I mean, this film should be apart of everyone’s collection when it comes out on DVD… not just because it’s a sequel, or because it’s “a black movie” featuring black actors but because it feels forced and sloppy.

There are enough modern elements to make it feel like it’s happening in the current time, but there are enough references to this group of friends’ complicated history that the original film and all of its complexity still feels fresh.

Just think about what The Best Man and The Best Man Holiday center around: A group of friends dealing with issues that every group of friends at some point has had to deal with.

Someone slept with someone they probably shouldn’t have, someone knew, someone else lied, and the very bonds that have allowed the crew to endure so much of life’s ups and downs now find themselves tested and strained.

One tangled mess of feelings and different ideals of what it means to be loyal all knotted up tying one vulnerable soul to the next.

If you have a crew… not just people you do fun activities with, but a real crew of close-knit friends then you have likely experienced some version of the obstacles this crew faces in these two films.

So not only is it brilliantly written, directed and acted… it’s also relatable as hell. You know how I do by now people, so yes… I REALLY DID just spend this entire review telling you about the movie without telling you much of anything about the movie. Yes, it’s because I want you to go see this one for yourself!

The funny parts aren’t as funny as before, it runs slightly long but that’s a short gripe list.

No more details from me, go to your nearest theatre and see this film.

Jan Scotland Honored by TUFCU for Service to the Community

By Artisha S Lawson
Sojourner’s Truth Reporter

The Toledo Urban Federal Credit Union honored 14 individuals for their service including Jan Scotland on November 23, 2013 at the Pinnacle in Maumee, Ohio.

Scotland, an avid community supporter for over two decades, received personal acknowledgement by TUFCU CEO Suzette Cowell during the banquet.

“He has always been an individual we can count on, and his insurance agency sponsors all the rides for the children during the African American Festival. He supports our community and we want to thank him tonight,” explained Cowell.

In addition to receiving acknowledgements from Cowell, Scotland received a standing ovation from the audience upon accepting a plaque and thank you gift. “It is always great to get your flowers while you’re still here,” shared Scotland.

Scotland owns a State Farm Insurance agency, which he opened in 1990. In 1996, Scotland organized Sleepy Hollow Athletic League that mentors and supports Toledo-area youth through physical activity.

He has also served as a Toledo city councilman. In addition to the award presented by TUFCU, Scotland has received a Jefferson Award from the American Institute for Public Service, Board of Community Relations Empowerment Award and Coalition of Black Trade Unionist award.

The honoree received congratulations from his family and from his congregation family. Scotland is an active member of St. Paul Missionary Baptist Church where Rev. James Willis is pastor.

In its 38th season, the CSCC maintains a liberal helping of standard classical music in its repertoire. However, it specializes in the performance of Negro spirituals and is dedicated to its preservation as well as the performance of works by African American composers. Its members come from all walks of life, unified by their mutual love of great music.

This award-winning ensemble has performed numerous times on radio and television and has appeared with the Toledo Symphony Orchestra, the Toledo Jazz Orchestra, and on programs presented by the Toledo Museum of Art, the Lourdes College Music Series, as well as on the University of Michigan’s “Music of Black Americans Symposium.”

The Chorus has embraced its civic role with participation in countless building and bridge dedications, community festivals, church programs and city events, including the Toledo’s Annual M. L. King Celebration at the University of Toledo. The CSCC is a past recipient of the “Community Impact Award” and the prestigious “Community Achievement in the Arts Award” from the Arts Commission of Greater Toledo.

In 2007, the Chorus was presented with the “Longevity Award” at the Glass City Gospel Music Awards ceremony. In its 38th season, the CSCC maintains a liberal helping of standard classical music in its repertoire. However, it specializes in the performance of Negro spirituals and is dedicated to its preservation as well as the performance of works by African-American composers.
