Dialoging Across Borders

Far beyond the blame-shame game that is being played out, how do we deal with the crisis at hand? Questions of race, ethnicity and class must be addressed.

- Walter Fluker

Just prior to last week’s water crisis, I caught up with Lucas County Commissioner Carol Contrada just before she entered the Detroit-Windsor tunnel while traveling on business. Contrada, the endorsed democrat for the November 4 election, is from Sylvania Township but has a depth of knowledge and sensitivity to the urban crisis disproportionately affecting Toledo’s minority community. This crisis, much like Toledo’s water/environmental problem, is one that has been ignored or put on the back burner by most politicians. The following is part of a dialog with Contrada about her efforts to respond to the unacknowledged emergency in Toledo’s African-American community.

Perryman: Do you have a point of emphasis that addresses the needs of Toledo’s African-American community?

Contrada: One of the things that we really want to address is minority business expansion. We have been working with the City of Toledo to establish a Minority Business Council and we’re committed to having minority representation on all of our county building projects including the jail.

We have also reached out to the University of Toledo to partner with minority businesses. We need to all work together so that all entities – the city of Toledo, the university, the Chamber of Commerce – have the same information, and when there is minority business certification it’s transportable, and good for everyone.

Perryman: Increasing economic opportunity in the African-American community is an excellent focus.

Contrada: Another project, that impacts the African-American community, probably more than any other community, is the summer youth employment. I’m very excited about the future of that program, specifically, and the opportunities for workforce training with our new ACT program will have a profound impact on people seeking jobs. By going through the ACT program individuals will receive a certificate that’s recognized by employers. So, this is really giving people a tool to be prepared to be hired, and to be matched with employers.

Perryman: Who are some of the employers that have signed onto the ACT pilot?

Contrada: Chrysler has signed on, and I think maybe Campbell’s Soup, also. I think we’re up to about 30 employers and we continue to receive recognition by employers that are outside our community who might be looking to move here, and make an investment, because they see that we will have a ready workforce.

Perryman: What are you thinking about along the lines of youth, which is a demographic that impacts the African-American community, probably more than any other community?

Lathrop House Supporters Celebrate Grand Opening and Historic Marker Dedication

By Tricia Hall
Sojourner’s Truth Reporter

After more than a decade of planning, fund-raising and collaboration, The Friends of The Lathrop House finally organized a community celebration to unveil the historical marker and opening of Lathrop House basement, the rest stop for untold numbers of runaway slaves on their way to freedom during the early 1800s.

The August 2, 2014 event marked a turning point in a 12-year-long struggle which included the initial relocation of the Lathrop House and securing of funds for historical renovations.

Mike Lieber, the Sylvania Town Crier, opened the program and delivered a proclamation. “The Lathrop House is the only Northwest Ohio station opened to the public. August 2 is now and forever known as Lathrop House Day.”

Invocations were delivered by Deacon John Algee of St. John the Baptist Church and Sr. Virginia Welsh of St. Martin De Porres. “This day reflects our legacy. I thank God for our ancestors’ undying desire to seek freedom and those selfless leaders who helped their freedom journey. Amidst those who tried to destroy this house, I thank God for this day,” shared Algee.

Event volunteers and supporters became play-actors and portrayed the Lathrop House owner Lucian Lathrop, Underground Railroad conductor Harriet Tubman and runaway slave Anderson Harper.

“We’re here to unveil this historic marker, the first in northwest Lucas County. This house had to be saved. I can’t imagine this house would have been torn down. A higher power is the reason why the house is here,” said Cathy Nelson, president of Friends of Freedom Society, Inc.

According to the City of Sylvania, Ohio website, the Lathrop House Project tab explains the project timeline which dates back to summer of 2001, when two parties inquired about purchasing the house and property.

St. Joseph’s Parish closed on the purchase for $350,000 and applied for a demolition permit. In November 2001, local citizens protested the demolition, organized a collection of $15,000 and Sylvania City Council passed a resolution asking St. Joseph’s not to demolish the house. Negotiations and legal action continued until an agreement was reached, the house relocated and a basement reconstructed at the current location.

The Friends of Freedom Society confirmed the Lathrop House as a historic location of the Underground Railroad with marker number 47. The Underground Railroad was a series of hidden safe havens utilized by runaway slaves. The Lathrop House provided safety and food for slaves on their way to Petersburg or Bedford Township in Michigan.

Friends of the Lathrop House invite the community to become a member, dues are $10.00 and meetings are bi-monthly beginning in September. Mail payment to 6751 Convent Blvd; Sylvania, Ohio 43560.

Community Gathers to Mourn Trazon Harris

By Tricia Hall
Sojourner’s Truth Reporter

JJ Express Drill and Drum Corps’ founder and director, community leader and youth mentor, Trazon Harris was laid to rest following a funeral held at Friendship Baptist Church on Saturday, August 2, 2014.

A garden of floral arrangements and sea of mourners gathered to pay their final respects to Harris who died on July 20. She dedicated over a decade to uplifting and educating youth in the Toledo area.

The family dressed in white and various shades of purple accessories as tears, memories, condolences, smiles, laughter and hugs were shared among over 750 attendees of the funeral.

The non-traditional funeral quickly turned into a celebration of her impact through JJ Express. Loud drums and high stepping movements from JJ Express members, which ranged from the original group to most recent members, paid tribute by executing their well-known high energy performances in the Friendship Baptist sanctuary.

Artina McCabe attended the funeral. Three of her children were members of J.J. Express. “The funeral was a true tribute to her memory and gave each kid some peace because they were able to participate. We all could visually see how many children she impacted. Look at how many came from out of town and travelled, just to pay their respects. I know she’s smiling in heaven,” said McCabe.

JJ Express alumni Crystal Harris and Andre Pearson shared memories during the service, and countless community leaders offered condolences.

Trazon Harris graduated from Start High School and was employed by The University of Toledo for over 20 years. She earned several community recognitions including the Youth Humanitarian Award in 2007 and Toledo Unity Award in 2012.

“Three of my boys, Arnez, Delano and Demetrie, plus boys from our church participated. She wasn’t just the director, but became a friend, a friend that I trusted my children with, no question. She had hundreds of kids that she mentored, I knew she personally loved each child,” said McCabe.

Social Media websites, including Facebook have dozens of posts and photos, expressing condolences to the Harris family. The family requested no photos during the funeral. Visit this website for past photos of J.J. Express Drill and Drum Corps https://myspace.com/jje_1
The Importance of Eating Fish and Seafood Twice a Week

Carly Steed, BGSU Dietetic Intern with Ohio State University Extension, Lucas County

The Truth Contributor

The 2010 Dietary Guidelines for Americans (the most recent, science-based recommendations) recommend that we eat at least eight ounces of fish/seafood (approximately two servings) per week in order to obtain heart healthy omega-3 fats that can help to prevent heart disease. Omega-3 fats from seafood can also help to improve nervous system development in infants and children.

Pregnant women or women who are breastfeeding are highly encouraged by the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) and EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) to consume a variety of seafood at least two times per week for nutritional health. An FDA study showed that on average, pregnant U.S. women are not eating adequate amounts of seafood. The FDA and 2010 Dietary Guidelines for Americans recommend pregnant women consume eight-12 ounces per week to enhance fetal growth and development.

Many women are under the assumption that they should not eat seafood during their pregnancy, and that it is dangerous. Instead of avoiding seafood, pregnant and breastfeeding women should consume lower mercury options. Make sure to eat fish that are highest in omega-3 fatty acids and lowest in mercury. The fish on this list includes salmon, trout, oysters, Atlantic and Pacific mackerel, herring and sardines. Clams, mussels and calamari also contain omega-3 fats. These are all good options to meet the nutrition recommendations of two servings a week.

Some types of fish should be limited due to their higher level of mercury. The types of fish that should be limited by pregnant and breastfeeding women, as well as young children in diets due to higher mercury concentrations include: tilefish from the Gulf of Mexico, shark, swordfish and king mackerel. Fortunately, these types of fish are not very common in the grocery store. The types that are popular on the market are usually low in mercury. A recommendation has also been made that no more than six ounces per week should come from white albacore tuna. Canned, light tuna is a better option since it has less mercury.

The rule of thumb with eating fish/seafood is to vary the types you are eating throughout the week to ensure safety. To get a better idea of the portion size recommend, remember that a drained can of tuna is about three to four ounces, a salmon steak ranges from four to six ounces, and one small trout is about three ounces.

Creative Ways to Prepare Seafood

Lean ways of preparing fish and seafood include grilling, broiling, roasting or baking. For seafood, discard oysters, mussels, and clams that do not clamp shut when you tap them before cooking, and discard the ones that do not open after cooking—they may not be safe to eat.

Cook lobster, shrimp, and scallops until they are opaque looking (milky-white). Use spices or herbs such as dill, chili powder, paprika, or cumin, and lemon/lime juice to flavor dishes without adding fat or salt. Breading, frying, or adding cheese and cream sauces adds a lot of unnecessary calories and fat. Keeping canned fish on hand such as tuna, salmon, or sardines makes a quick and easy meal!

On a salad try substituting scallops, shrimp, or crab for chicken or steak on a salad. Substitute canned salmon or tune for deli meat in wraps or sandwiches. Other ideas for incorporating more seafood include: buying or making salmon patties, making shrimp stir fry with vegetables and brown rice, making oyster stew, grilled fish tacos, oven-baked Pollock with asparagus, clams or scallops with whole wheat pasta and marinara sauce,
Regular Exercise Can Help Kids Do Better in School

Special to The Truth

Physical activity may not be the first thing parents or teachers think about when they want to boost a child’s academic performance, but evidence supports the notion that a bit of exercise for the body is beneficial to the brain as well.

In fact, kindergarteners who participated in Build Our Kids’ Success (BOKS), a free before-school program involving physical activity and nutrition education, had significantly improved memory skills as rated by teachers, compared to their peers who did not participate. A study of the children’s performance also concluded that those who participated in the program exhibited good behavior in the classroom.

“A sedentary life and poor eating habits can lower kids’ performance in the classroom and start a cycle of health problems later in life,” says Kathleen Tullie, Founder and Executive Director of BOKS and the Director of Social Responsibility for Reebok. “Simply stated, a healthy body and a healthy brain go hand in hand.”

So how can you incorporate more healthy habits into your family’s routine?

- Active weekends: Instead of a lazy Saturday or Sunday, get outside and get moving. Take a soccer ball to the park for a pick-up game or hike a local trail. Make exercise on the weekends a regular habit for your family, and those habits will extend to the rest of the week as well.
- Fuel throughout the day: A hearty breakfast sets kids up for a great day. Follow that up with a healthful, satisfying lunch and snacks such as nuts and fruit, to help kids avoid the pitfalls of the junk food machines.
- Cook together: Take-out is great when you’re crunched for time, but be sure to cook at home at least a few times a week. Not only are homemade meals one of the only ways you can be exactly sure of what you’re feeding your family, but the act of cooking together is a great opportunity to impart some lessons about nutrition and eating right.
- Bed time: Adequate sleep is crucial for a healthy, functional mind and body. Setting a regular bedtime and sticking to it is best to ensure kids get a full night’s rest.
- Volunteer to get your school involved: Children should have one hour or more of physical activity daily, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Unfortunately, physical education class may not be sufficient. Investigate what other opportunities your child’s school has for physical activity, such as before school programs like BOKS or after school sports. If your school doesn’t have such a program in place, look into starting BOKS at your school.

BOKS, for example, can be run by anyone—parents, teachers, the school nurse or a community activist. To learn more, visit www.BOKSKids.org.

Healthy habits will not only reduce your child’s risk for such problems as obesity, diabetes and heart disease, they can help prime children for more success inside the classroom and beyond. So give your children a leg up and encourage them to get moving.

HHS Awards $54.6 Million in Affordable Care Act Mental Health Services Funding

221 Health Centers nationwide will expand behavioral health services using funds from the health care law

Health and Human Services Secretary Sylvia M. Burwell announced last week $54.6 million in Affordable Care Act funding to support 221 health centers in 47 states and Puerto Rico to establish or expand behavioral health services for over 450,000 people nationwide. Health centers will use these new funds for efforts such as hiring new mental health professionals, adding mental health and substance use disorder health services, and employing integrated models of primary care.

“These awards will further reduce the barriers that too often prevent people from getting the help they need for mental health problems,” said Secretary Burwell. “Health centers with these awards are on the front lines of better integrating mental health into primary care and improving access to care through the Affordable Care Act.”

The Affordable Care Act expanded mental health and substance use disorder benefits for approximately 60 million Americans. Today’s announcement gives those with newly expanded health coverage additional opportunities to access high quality care.

“These Affordable Care Act funds will enable community health centers to better meet the needs of people with mental health conditions in communities nationwide,” said Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) Administrator Mary K. Wakefield, Ph.D., R.N.

Today, nearly 1,300 health centers operate more than 9,200 service delivery sites that provide care to over 21.7 million patients in every state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and the Pacific Basin. In 2013, health centers saw over 1.2 million behavioral health patients.

Put Yourself First – Make Yourself a Priority!

By Angela Steward, Fitness Motivator
The Truth Contributor

When most women walk into my gym for the first time, they are extremely nervous. It’s a group setting that tends to make most newcomers tense. There’s something about witnessing 40+ women in a space, jumping, sweating, and shouting words of encouragement to each other that makes some women very uncomfortable. At times, newcomers are excited and they jump right in, while others run for their cars and speed out of the parking lot.

However, those who stay and actually immerse themselves into my fitness program see healthy results quickly. They then begin to make exercise a priority. They realize that getting healthy by stepping into fitness is what they really want for themselves – FabFit is the first step in the right direction.

One thing most of us do is say one thing while doing another. From my experience as a fitness professional, I hear this statement regularly. Just think of how many times you or I’ve heard someone say, (or even heard yourself say) “I really want to lose weight…I should start exercising.”

However, if that person really wanted to lose weight, wouldn’t she do everything possible to make that happen, including exercise? If that sounds familiar, what actually happens between what that person says she wants and what that person would actually do is two different things. Most times, it usually comes down to priorities.

One of the reasons we don’t follow through sometimes is our expectations aren’t realistic. When we expect one thing and get something entirely different, we wonder why we bother at all and we often have unrealistic views of what exercise can do for us. Unfortunately, most of us expect: (1) To lose weight quickly. We expect to see results after only a few weeks of exercise, even though for most of us that isn’t realistic. (2) Exercise is temporary. We think we can exercise for a few weeks or months, quit and it will somehow stick. (3) Exercise to change our bodies the way we want. Where we store fat is based on genetics, doing certain exercise will not reduce problem areas. (4) To see results on our timetable, not our body’s. Weight loss involves many factors, some beyond our control. Once you begin to burn more calories than you’re eating, your body will respond in its own time.

(5) To be motivated every day. Believe me, you won’t always feel like exercising. It’s up to you to keep yourself motivated. (6) Exercise to be easy. Changing your body takes hard work on a consistent basis.

Take a look at Ronda Jacobs!! Ronda walked into my gym with an attitude of intention. She wanted to get healthy. She worked hard every class, she was loaded with sweat every class, and she never complained! She stayed focused and look at what 90 days of consistent exercise made. She made her health a priority! Her “ah-ha” moment? A friend showed Ronda a picture of herself and... continued on page 10

Ronda Jacobs couldn’t believe how she looked in the picture! But look at her now, 90 days and down two dress sizes!! I’m truly excited to see what the next 90 days will bring.

Dear Ryan,

I have a couple of issues to ask you about and I hope that you can help me in any way. I have a 16 year old child that is overweight and I am scared for her health. I have been overweight my whole life and we are trying to lose weight together. We started walking in the spring and for the last few months have been at a complete stand still. Neither one of us has lost any more weight, we don’t seem to be toning up much at all and our motivation is lacking because of it. What can we do to see some changes again?

Defeated

Dear Hopeful for Change,

First I refuse to address you as “Defeated!” You have a little set back, a hump you need to get over. You are in no way defeated. You are making an effort and as long as you are working towards a worthy goal that word shouldn’t even be in your vocabulary.

You and your daughter have come to a place where either your body has gotten used to the work or you haven’t been as conscious of your food choices as you were in the beginning. There are a few things you could do to get you past this plateau. Increase your walk time, add resistance training, keep a food journal or walk the distance in a shorter amount of time.

By increasing your walking time or distance you will start to push your body past what it is used to doing and increase calorie burning. You can either keep the distance and work to shorten the duration or just simply increase the distance. Whichever you prefer.

Adding resistance training to your walk will add variety, incorporate more muscle involvement, increase calorie burning as well as create muscle density. It can be simple things.

Start out doing 20 repetitions of just push ups, squats lunges and crunches, but break them up along your walk. Every 100 yards do five push ups, your next 100 yards do five squats, 100 yards 5 crunches, 100 yards five lunges then repeat till you hit 20 reps. It doesn’t have to be 100 yards apart. I just used that distance so you have an example to use.

Food journals are important. You may think you are eating pretty well but once you look back at your food choices you may not be eating as well as you thought you were.

It is important to consume lean choices of protein every time you eat. Good carbohydrates that are high in fiber will also play a large part of your fat loss results. Don’t give up.

Understand you must keep moving forward to be able look back to see where you were. Stay positive and focused. If you need more help feel free to email me again. I have fitness camps and personal training that will help you to progress as well. Good Luck.

New Study: 10.3 Million Gained Health Coverage During the Marketplace’s First Annual Open Enrollment Period

Special to The Truth

Health and Human Services Secretary Sylvia M. Burwell announced last week the release of a new study, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, estimating that 10.3 million uninsured adults gained health care coverage following the first open enrollment period in the Health Insurance Marketplace.

The report examines trends in insurance before and after the open enrollment period and finds greater gains among those states that expanded their Medicaid programs under the Affordable Care Act.

“We are committed to providing every American with access to quality, affordable health services and this study reafirms that the Affordable Care Act has set us on a path toward achieving that goal,” said Secretary Burwell. “This study also reaffirms that expanding Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act is important for coverage, as well as a good deal for states. To date, 26 states plus D.C. have moved forward with Medicaid expansion. We’re hopeful remaining states will come on board and we look forward to working closely with them.”

According to the authors’ findings, the uninsured rate for adults ages 18 to 64 fell from 21 percent in September 2013 to 16.3 percent in April 2014. After taking into account economic factors and pre-existing trends, this corresponded to a 5.2 percentage-point change, or 10.3 million adults gaining coverage.

The decline in the uninsured was significant for all age, race/ethnicity, and gender groups, with the largest changes occurring among Latinos, blacks, and adults ages 18-34 – groups the Administration targeted for outreach during open enrollment.

Coverage gains were concentrated among low-income adults in states expanding Medicaid and among individuals in the income range eligible for Marketplace subsidies. The study finds a 5.1 percentage point reduction in the uninsured rate associated with Medicaid expansion, while in states that have not expanded their Medicaid programs, the change in the uninsured rate among low-income adult populations was not statistically significant.

Today’s study also looks at access to care, and finds that within the first six months of gaining coverage, more adults (approximately 4.4 million) reported having a personal doctor and fewer (approximately 5.3 million) experienced difficulties paying for medical care.

Today’s study does not include data from before 2012, as coverage was changing rapidly during this period. This means the results do not include the more than three million young adults who gained health insurance coverage through their parents’ plans.

The analysis builds on previous studies by reviewing a larger sample size and taking into account changes in the economy and pre-existing trends in insurance coverage. Using survey data from the Gallup-Healthways Well-Being Index for January 1, 2012, through June 30, 2014, the authors analyzed changes in the uninsured rate over time. This is also the first study to associate reductions in the uninsured rate with state-level statistics on enrollment in the Marketplaces and Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act, as described in HHS enrollment reports, and to assess the impact of the improved coverage on access to care.

If you want a healthy lifestyle, you have to be willing to make your health a priority! You have to be willing to change how you live. It doesn’t mean changing everything overnight, but simply being open to a new and different way of living. Get realistic about your health! Being unrealistic as to what exercise can do for you is just one way of sabotaging yourself, sending exercise to the bottom of your to-do list. You can start your life over again, just like Ronda. She took action, she made a commitment to her health, she made exercise a very important part of her life – Ronda became a priority!

Getting Waisted: A Survival Guide to Being Fat in a Society That Loves Thin by Monica Parker

By Terri Schlichenmeyer
The Truth Contributor

Up and down. Up and down.

When your children were infants, you did it for them all night. You do it now with the remote, clicking through when you’re looking for something good on TV. You’re up and down while cleaning, working, exercising, and weighing yourself — and on that note, if the latest diet doesn’t work, maybe the next one will.

Or, maybe, as you’ll see in the new book Getting Waisted by Monica Parker, it’s time to break this yo-yo string.

Born in Glasgow, Scotland, Monica Parker was six-and-a-half pounds at birth but an hour later, “I weighed sixty-two pounds.” That’s a slight exaggeration, she admits, but the point is that, for as far back as she remembers, Parker was overweight.

Her mother, whom Parker calls Queen Elizabeth (resemblance in attitude only), was a Viennese refugee from Hitler’s regime who’d been forced to leave her two eldest children behind during the war. The family was reunited when Parker was a small child, but the damage had already been done: she grew up lonely, picked-on, self-conscious, and believing that her mother barely noticed her. Subconsciously thinking that being larger would mean being seen, Parker ate.

She was chubby when the family — which now included Parker’s estranged father — immigrated to Toronto. She was chunky as a teen when she learned that her size gave her “power” - but not enough to keep her from being raped. She tried to flirt, tried to date, hoped to find a boyfriend, and ended up being little more than a side-kick to her two svelte roommates as a young adult.

Men didn’t like Parker’s body. She didn’t like it, either.

Parker tried every diet that sounded workable. She starved herself, then binged; rewarded and punished herself; and almost ruined the relationship she always wanted. And then, in one of those only-in-Hollywood moments, Hollywood called and Parker was offered a job she dreamed of. It meant moving to Beverly Hills, though, an atmosphere that didn’t exactly nurture Parker’s body image...

Getting Waisted is a nice surprise. It’s funny in the right places, sad where sad belongs, and supportive in a Sisterhood kind of way. However, there’s a big but...

In this memoir, author Monica Parker takes us through her personal ups and downs — a lot. Reminiscent of yo-yo dieting, we read about highs and lows that happen repeatedly, details that start to seem like more of the same. I didn’t mind that at first — or fourth, or fifth — but I quickly lost my appetite for it. It just made the book feel padded.

But then — literally on the penultimate page — we get the nugget we’ve waited for, the raison d’être, the thing every woman needs to know. I wish it had come sooner, but angels sang when I read it and that’s good enough for me.

Watch for copious amounts of (justified) (and charming) name-dropping when you read this book — and if you’re a mirror-avoiding, diet-trying woman who hates her thighs-arms-stomach-chin, you should. For you, Getting Waisted is one to pick up that really needs to be reconnected?

Contrada: Well, so many of the projects that I think are critical to our community touch on a whole series of different needs, and so youth employment is one where we work with young people to prepare them to be long-term members of the workforce. I’m really proud of our partnership with Pathways and I think that that’s something that we can continue to work with Pathways to help achieve. And, as a former teacher, I know how talented young people are, and how much they have to offer their community if someone just reaches out to them.

Perryman: Absolutely, which leads me into the next area. What are your thoughts as far as solutions to the shootings and homicides that are really problematic in the inner-city?

Contrada: Well, one of the things I think is that a most important thing that any government can do is make sure that neighborhoods are safe, and a fundamental principle of having safe neighborhoods is having police on the streets. They have to be visible, and they must be present at all times, and easily accessible. Fundamental to safe communities is to have a visible, active police force.

Perryman: But Carol, if we were to get to the root of this issue, wouldn’t we ask why is this happening? It’s not happening just because African-American young people are so much worse than other people, but there’s got to be some problem at the root. Maybe that problem is hopelessness; maybe it is the lack of jobs; maybe it is because their schools have fewer resources than others, and they’ve just given up. They’ve been disappointed over and over, so they just say the hell with it, and so they have no value for human life. What about trying to get to the root of this issue of inner-city black on black violence which appears to be to be a manifestation of something deeper?

Contrada: I am not a psychologist or a sociologist, but certainly having looked into root causes, I think that the breakup of the family unit is significant. When there is instability in a young person’s life, they’re looking for validation, for friendship, for love, for approval in anyplace they can find it. And if there aren’t parents at home, or if there is a parent who is there and caring, but because that parent is having to hold down two jobs just to put food on the table, it’s the breakup of that family unit, or the changing family unit. Society has not provided a good support system for families that are different than the traditional family with a mother and father at home all the time. I don’t know that society can entirely address that, but we certainly can address the majority of the issues, where young people need to feel safe, and they need to feel loved, and they need to feel cared for. And I see them over and over again in the literature, and then in real situations where there’s no one to turn to.

Perryman: The breakup of the family could be traced back to mass incarceration, where thousands of young inner-city men have been exported to prisons because of their “street crimes” and drug sales. And then when they go to prison they’re not rehabilitated. Instead, they’re educated to become more intense criminals. So –

Contrada: Well, let’s dive even deeper. I can say it possibly in one word, which is poverty - when you have people struggling, you're struggling – “Are you trying to stay warm? You’re trying to find food. You’re trying to find shelter, and you’re trying to maintain those things. And poverty is crippling. I think that most people want to be able to provide for themselves, but if the possibility of getting a job is hopeless, and if they’re struggling with maybe some form of mental illness or addiction on top of that, sometimes the life on the street, and by that I mean criminal activity is your only chance of survival, they may feel. It doesn’t mean it’s right, but what we need to do is we need to help people get out of poverty.

And then, as you know, the criminal justic system is one my major areas of focus, and it has been throughout my term. The new jail is, I think, symbolic of many, many changes that we have to do, but I’ve been working on addressing critical needs of the system from the very beginning - from really pre-arrest, all the way through to re-entry. When you look at pre-trial services, what happens when someone get arrested? Well, do they really need to be in jail, or do they really need to be – like you said – if it’s a nonviolent drug offense? What we need to do is help those individuals be able to stabilize their lives, so that they, number one, don’t re-offend, and number two, have a chance to live a productive life in their community. I chaired a re-entry subcommittee of the Criminal Justice Coordinating Council, and concluded that the most important thing is to make sure that when someone is released to the community they have an opportunity to get a job, because that is the single most important factor, but there are a whole lot of wraparound services that are absolutely necessary also.

Perryman: Well, quickly, one other thing, that’s the jail. I believe that if the new jail is built in a low-income area that it could build up that area economically, offering jobs to people who live there, and businesses that are around it. What are your thoughts?

Contrada: I agree. And I also want to tell you that yesterday I spoke with the U.S. Secretary of Labor, Mr. Thomas Perez, and I told him that I have a trip scheduled to the Cook County Jail. Mr. Perez told me that the Cook County Jail provides a one-stop employment opportunity. And I thought, “What a great idea! Oh, boy, I can’t wait to go.”

First of all, the jail is very secure, so it makes the kinds of service work it is built more secure. It is not intrusive; it’s clean; it’s safe, and it tends to lift the surrounding areas. And it also brings employment to the area, because there are people that are visiting the jail, or employees of the jail that they need to stop and have lunch; they need to maybe go to the bank; they need to maybe go to the laundromat. And so services go up near the jail, and it really can invigorate a neighborhood.

I also visited the Washtenaw County Jail just south of Ann Arbor, and they had an entire justice complex, and it was lovely. It was beautifully landscaped, and there were a whole lot of wraparound services around it and nearby. It was quite an active, vibrant place, and there were people coming to visit the jail, and they were also going to transact other business with the government, like maybe make a child support payment, or pay their taxes, and it really invigorated the neighborhood also.

Perryman: Well, you’ve been very insightful and have some brilliant ideas.

Contrada: I’m very, very excited about the things that we’re doing, and I feel like it’s imperative that low-income people, African Americans, young people, really, really have a future in Toledo in a positive way. We’re fighting on all fronts to help accomplish this, and I feel like we’ve got strong partnerships with the safe spaces community, with the health community, with educators, and with the business owners. We’re all pulling on the same oar going in the same direction, and it’s going to help everyone.

Lucas County Auditor Releases Senior and Veteran Notification

Anita Lopez attends senior luncheon at Local 912.

Special to The Truth

Lucas County Auditor Anita Lopez spoke at a luncheon for area seniors and veterans on Wednesday, July 30 at noon. Her main topic was about the recent changes to the Homestead Exemption for disabled veterans. The lunch and learn were held at Local 912, located at 2225 Consaul Street. Additionally, Auditor Lopez shared information the recent changes in property tax exemptions for VFW and American Legion Posts. These organizations may now qualify for beneficial tax exemptions.

According to Lopez, 100 percent disabled veterans, as deemed by the Department of Veterans Affairs, can begin to apply for the benefit starting in January 2015. This exemption is even more beneficial than the current homestead exemption because there is no age requirement and no personal income means test. The exemption shields up to $50,000 of the taxable value of a home which is significantly more than $25,000 for the current homestead exemption.

Amended Substitute House Bill 85, regarding disabled veterans and the Homestead Exemption, was signed by Governor John Kasich on June 12. The State of Ohio will now grant real estate tax exemptions to VFW or American Legion Posts as long as they make less than $36,000 annually. As this is a recent change, veterans are encouraged to check with their VFW or American Legion Posts to see if they have already applied for the tax exemption.

The Homestead Program was designed to provide seniors and the disabled savings on their property taxes. According to Lopez, “there may be people in the county who qualify for the tax break but do not take advantage of the program.”

Auditor Lopez urges anyone who thinks they qualify for the program to contact the Education and Outreach Department at 419-213-4406. Additional information about the Homestead Program, including a downloadable application form, is available online www.co.lucas.oh.us/auditor.

Shopping Smart

Many people avoid purchasing seafood and fish because it can be costly. Following these tips can help to make incorporating seafood into your diet much more affordable. Tilapia, sardines, canned tuna and salmon, and frozen seafood and fish are usually lower-cost options. Look at the newspaper or the grocery store weekly advertisements for store sales, coupons, or specials that will help you to save money.

Recipe: Spicy Baked Fish
1 pound Cod (or other fish) fillet
1 Tbsp Olive oil
1 tsp Your favorite spicy seasoning, salt free
3 Tbsp Lime juice

1. Preheat oven to 350° F. Spray a casserole dish with cooking oil spray.
2. Wash and dry fish. Place in dish. Mix oil, juice, and seasoning, and drizzle over fish.
3. Bake uncovered for 15 minutes or until fish flakes with fork. Cut into 4 pieces. Serve with brown rice and vegetables.

*Makes 4 servings--Serving size: 1 piece (3 oz)

Bishop Mitchell is a graduate of Crisp County High School in Cordele, Georgia and an honorably discharged Vietnam War veteran with four commendations for extraordinary service - including the venerated Purple Heart. He developed a love of ministry while actively serving at Rose of Sharon Holiness Church for seven years prior to becoming deacon. Soon after in 1970, he was ordained to elder by Bishop Charles Flournoy and Presiding Bishop J. R. Hobson in South Bend, Indiana.

Once in Ohio and prior to pastoring Crusaders for Christ Church, Bishop Mitchell attended Toledo Bible College. Later, Bishop Mitchell returned to Cordele, Georgia and transported his entire family of seven to Toledo, Ohio where he was blessed with the ability to purchase them a home. His father passed just before taking this courageous leap of faith.

Bishop Mitchell’s dedication to family continues to be nurtured through his beautiful partner and wife of 45 years, Evangelist Celeste Blue Mitchell. They are the proud parents of a son, Carlos A. Mitchell, and daughter, Tiffany L. Reynolds.

As a retired real estate property owner and professional meat cutter, Bishop Mitchell stays involved in the family owned business, Celeste Burial Garments Manufacturing & Distribution Company established in 1988.

A congratulatory dinner will be held in Bishop Mitchell’s honor on September 19. Tickets are available calling Sandra at 419-699-6742.

Brandi Brown, Program Director at brandibrown@urbanradio.fm
Congregation members, community supporters, and faith-based leaders gathered on August 2, 2014 for the pastoral installation banquet for Rev. K. David Johnson, D.Min, of Third Baptist Church. The lower level of the historic building hosted the banquet. White daisies, black and white decorations and catering by Three Sisters were enjoyed by all guests.

Rev. Johnson was called to preach at age seven, accepted at age 16 and preached his first sermon at Solid Rock Church in Oakland, California. In 1976, he received his Baptist License to preach, and ordained as Baptist clergyman in 1981. He served as a Navy chaplain for 19 years and achieved the rank of Lt. Commander. Rev. Johnson has provided ministerial leadership for Southern Baptist, National Baptist, American Baptist Churches in several states.

“This installation banquet expressed the love from the church, we’re moving forward into the next century and plan to remain a loving partner in this community,” explained Rev. Johnson.

Deacon Alice Courts presided over the banquet, Deacon Percy Rankins delivered the welcome, Deacon James Dunn shared the scripture and prayer. Minister Pamela Knox read a poem called “The Occasion,” Rev. James Willis was the guest speaker and Minister Barbie Harrison delivered the closing remarks.

“Today we’re embarking upon the installation of our pastor. He’s blessed us already for one year. He is chosen by God, because we prayed for a pastor and God delivered. We’re walking in faith and... continued on page 13
