We must deplore the demonization and criminalization of our own, which we perpetuate when we readily accept media and police versions of killings. Stop believing that if a person was killed under the cover of law that they “deserved it.”
Righteous Indignation

The Negro question will trouble the American government and the American conscience until a substantial effort is made to settle it upon the principles of justice.

— Charles W. Chestnut

The recent grand jury decisions not to indict police officers Darren Wilson for the killing of Mike Brown in Ferguson and Daniel Pantaleo in New York for the death of Eric Garner, are lamentable. I mourn, along with the families of Brown and Garner, the heartbreaking decisions of a criminal injustice system, which viciously heaped pain upon the unbearable sorrow of losing a loved one.

I am also outraged.

Statistically, unarmed black men, women and children are brutally killed by police at extraordinary rates compared to others. Often, like Brown and Garner, these executions evolve out of police harassment and occur as a result of a minor or fictitious offense, such as selling loose cigarettes or because “you fit the description.”

The irony is, while unarmed blacks are dying violently in great numbers, seldom if ever, are their killers held accountable in courts of law. This frequent and regular obscene devaluation and disrespect of black humanity “makes me wanna holler and throw up both my hands.”

Tens of thousands of others are also “mad as hell” and are participating in multi-racial, multi-cultural and intergenerational protests throughout the country, including a National March Against Police Violence in Washington, D.C. on Saturday, December 13, 2014.

Could civil unrest come to Toledo?

It seems that local residents are more outraged by recent police shootings of dogs than the killing of Brown and other blacks, but unrest is certainly a possibility. The “skeletons of unarmed or nonthreatening blacks killed by police” lie in the closets of both the Toledo Police and Lucas County Sheriff’s departments.

However, local relations between the community and police have greatly benefited from the work of former Toledo Police Chief Derrick Diggs.

Despite dwindling resources and manpower, Diggs was able to ease tensions in the community, lower crime rates and reduce internal affairs complaints by wedding together data-driven and community policing strategies. Diggs was also highly visible in the black community. Currently, Sergeant Anita Madison is doing a great job working in community affairs as are Officers Florence Wormely and Ben Tucker, the highest-ranking black police officer on the force.

Since the chief of police generally sets the tone for the quality of police – community relationships by the way he or she responds to police misconduct or lack of professionalism, it will be interesting to see how TPD moves forward under the leadership of George Kral, incoming chief.

Some describe Kral as an “administrative chief” rather than a “chief that has rapport with and can reach out to the community.” Other insiders complain that the “real” police chief is Mayor D. Michael Collins, who is “trying to run both TPD and the City of Toledo but has no clue.”

We shall see. George Kral is a man of integrity and an “honorable person” according to his peers.

Nevertheless, there are eye-opening lessons revealed by the failure-to-convict grand jury decisions of the police officers involved in the killing of Eric Garner and Michael Brown.

First, prosecutors are elected officials who partner with police in a system designed to “mete out justice.” For that reason, it is highly unlikely that prosecutors will ever make a serious attempt to get a criminal conviction on a police officer.

Also, as an “elected” official, prosecutors are beholden to those who fund their political careers. Therefore punishment, in the criminal justice system, is judged on the basis of market-based decisions and money rather than by social equity outcomes.

Additionally, an efficient mechanism of enormous peer pressure is deeply embedded in the culture of police departments. This culture uses psychological and even physical intimidation to maintain a blue wall of silence concerning wrongdoing by police officers.

Yet, rather than responding with violence and destruction of property, there is a bright path out of the dark criminal injustice in Ferguson and New York. It is a road that can lead the black community forward to equal protection under the law and affir...

Last week, State Rep. Sandra Williams (D-Cleveland) together with Governor Kasich and other elected officials announced the creation of the Ohio Task Force on Community and Police Relations. The task force will be charged with making policy recommendations that seek to build trust between Ohio communities and law enforcement. Rep. Williams issued this statement following today’s announcement:

“Securing a community’s trust is critical to ensuring the success and effectiveness of local law enforcement. This taskforce will help to foster an environment of mutual respect, allowing officers to build stronger bonds in the neighborhoods they patrol. This translates into increased cooperation from community members in investigations and crime prevention activities.

“I understand that the topic of race relations can be difficult to address, and I commend those who have taken part in working to improve mutual understanding between law enforcement and the African American community. An open dialog helps cities take steps to change long-standing beliefs and heal from experiences and actions that have shaped the current conditions in race relations.

“Admitting there is a problem is the first step to addressing any issue. The creation of this taskforce is an imperative step in the right direction, and I am committed to devising constructive strategies that keep our communities safe.”

Senator Brown Provides Sponsor Testimony on Bill to Create Sales Tax Holiday in Ohio

SB 303 would eliminate sales tax on qualifying energy star products for one weekend in April

Last week, Senator Edna Brown (D-Toledo) provided sponsor testimony on SB 303 in the Ohio Senate Ways and Means Committee. SB 303 would establish a three day sales tax holiday for qualifying energy star products starting on the first Friday in April each year.

“I believe establishing this sales tax holiday in Ohio is good for business, good for consumers, and good for society,” said Senator Brown.

“By passing SB 303 we can help encourage increased economic activity, provide consumers with short and long term savings, and reduce pollution and energy consumption.”

Energy Star is a voluntary program administered by the federal Department of Energy and the Environmental Protection Agency to identify and promote energy-efficient products. The goal of the program is to reduce energy consumption, improve energy security, and reduce pollution through voluntary labeling of products that meet the highest energy efficiency standards.

If SB 303 is passed into law, Ohio would join six other states who currently have established sales tax holidays for energy star qualified products.

A Journey Through Healing Holds Annual Memorial Service

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

Eleven years ago, Bea Daniels, founder of A Journey Through Healing, held her first holiday memorial service to help others with the healing process that follows the loss of a loved one. This past Saturday, Daniels’ annual event brought out dozens of followers to The University of Toledo’s Scott Park Campus for an afternoon of tears and remembrance.

This year’s service leader was Rev. Timothy V. Pettaway, Sr. Saxophonist C.J. Manning provided the musical interludes and readings were presented by Marya Checz and Thelma Autman.

The highlight of the annual ceremony, of course, is the candle ceremony during which those gathered are invited to the front to light a candle to commemorate the passing of a loved one.

Daniels, who founded A Journey Through Healing upon the death of her mother, felt there was a need to help others who deal with similar situations. The mission of the company is to provide the tools that will help those grieving to travel through their grief and loss. Daniels accomplishes this mission by providing workshops, in addition to the annual service.

NANBPWC, Inc Holds 50th Anniversary Celebration

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

On Thursday, December 4, the National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women’s Clubs, Inc, Toledo Club, held its 50th Anniversary celebration at McMasters Hall of the Toledo Lucas County Public Library.

The evening featured entertainment by the St. Paul Baptist Total Praise Dance Team, the Clarence Smith Community Choir, the Jesup W. Scott High School Dance Team and the Interfaith Mass Choir.

The Toledo Youth Club presented awards to Jordan Collins – first place national essay winner – and to Paula Smith – first place national oratorical winner.

Barbara Tucker, financial secretary, arranged for the donation of dozens of new and gently used books to Pickett Academy.

The NANBPWC was founded in 1935 to promote and protect the interests of women business owners and professionals. The club encourages youth and young adults to achieve economic independence. The International Affairs Division operates in Africa, the Caribbean and the global community building socio-economic relationships among women.

• We can introduce police accountability legislation and demand that the same systems that preach personal responsibility for African Americans are held accountable for their inhumane practices and the desecration of black lives.

• We must deplore the demonization and criminalization of our own, which we perpetuate when we readily accept media and police versions of killings. Stop believing that if a person was killed under the cover of law that they “deserved it.”

We must strenuously advocate for the Department of Justice to open a local office and become more involved in police and criminal justice matters. This takes biased decision-making out of the hands of local officials who may be connected socially or economically to police or have other unapparent conflicts of interest.

Finally, if we are going to achieve equality and fairness in our social, political, and criminal justice systems, we MUST:

Demand that the politicians we elect represent our interests rather than the interests of the marketplace or raise the holy hell of righteous indignation.

“Cultural Competence” – The Importance of Knowing and Respecting Ourselves and Others in Schooling

By Lynne Hamer, Ph.D, and Willie McKether, Ph.D
The Truth Contributors

We hear the words “cultural competence” bandied about, but when it comes right down to it, do we have a shared understanding of what this phrase means?

As academics trained in the folklorist tradition (Hamer) and in anthropology (McKether), we tend to think a lot about culture. While the concept of culture has well over 200 meanings, it all comes down to “a way of life,” including important aspects of life such as how we dress, how we worship, the food we eat, the music we listen to, how we raise our families, and how we educate our young—just to name a few.

Importantly, culture is something that changes over time and, critically worth noting, it varies from one ethnic group to another.

National, regional and local data show that the overwhelming majority of teachers in all schools—public, private, and charter—are white, female and middle class and thus bring white, female and middle class cultures and worldviews to their teaching.

Clearly, being a white female teacher with a middle class background is not a bad thing, but data also show that it can present challenges to these teachers when they are assigned to teach children who come from a different ethnic group and socio-economic class, and when they have not had lots of practice thinking about culture and cultural competence.

In conversations number two and number three, participants in the “Community Conversations” group zeroed in on the importance of cultural understanding or, even further, cultural competence for students, parents, and especially teachers. The group’s definitions of “cultural competence” included:

• “the need to show love and care”
• “having the wherewithal and desire to get to know the culture of people you are working with, then working to find common ground by starting where they are”
• “to have the skills to create relationships with students to help them be successful”
• “being able to function in the culture you are working in by being knowledgeable about it”
• “having empathy and sensitivity to others’ cultures”

Pretty great definitions. As a group, we also thought it was important to be mindful that “culture” isn’t just black and white: cultural groups are based not only on the construct of race or ethnicity, which is often defined as including language and religion as well as national origins. Thus in Toledo, both African American and Latino cultural groups are prominent, as well as groups strongly identifying as Irish, Bulgarian, Hungarian, Syrian, Lebanese, Mexican, and many others. Cultural groups also include those based on gender identity, sexual orientation, shared disability, regional origin and neighborhood.

As one participant very accurately pointed out, “There’s more to culture beyond black and white. We automatically do the black/white division when in this community there are many others.”

Educator and educational theorist Gloria Ladson-Billings has done more than most scholars to define cultural competence and put it into practice, preparing teachers at the University of Wisconsin-Madison in a program that could serve as a model here in Toledo. We compared our definitions to Ladson-Billings’s (2001) description of what makes a teacher culturally competent:

Teachers who are prepared to help students become culturally competent are themselves culturally competent. They...

• must be aware of their own culture and its role in their lives,
• do not spend their time trying to be hip and cool and ‘down’ with their students,
• know enough about students’ cultural and individual life circumstances to be able to communicate well with them
• understand the need to study the students because they believe there is something there worth learning.

We found participants were saying much of the same things in more specific words. What is striking is that in both our group’s definition and Ladson-Billings’s, “cultural competence” isn’t defined superficially based on holidays celebrated or ways of dressing, but on appreciating ourselves and others as complex individuals, noticing what makes us and them tick, and responding to those things.

We would emphasize that definitions of cultural competence go beyond applying to only teachers. Parents and students also have a responsibility and obligation to become culturally competent in habits and customs that increase opportunities for school success.

It’s Never Too Early to Foster a Love for Learning

Special to the Truth

It may be too soon to start thinking about sending your baby off to kindergarten, but kids are never too young to develop a love of learning. The way you play with them during the early years can enrich their development substantially, say early childhood experts.

“Brain development is never more rapid than in the first few years, so these formative experiences during infancy and preschool are extremely important,” says Lise Eliot, Ph.D, an early childhood development expert and member of the Expert Panel at VTech, a leader in age-appropriate and developmental stage-based electronic learning products for children.

Certain games and toys can truly engage children, giving them a head start in learning. Whether your child is an infant or preschooler, there are many ways to encourage growth and development through playtime.

Language
Children use words to express themselves, but also to learn about the people and world around them. Reading helps build their vocabulary, so read to your children daily until they can on their own.

Also, consider toys like the Lil’ Speller Phonics Station, which features fun sounds, melodies and animations that reinforce vocabulary and encourages interactive learning. With help from the toy’s Spelling Bee feature, kids can learn to spell more than 200 common three-letter words.

Math
Math can be fun, especially if the foundation is set early. Help kids learn to count while identifying objects. For example, “how many doggies are in the park today?”

New toys, such as the Chomp & Count Dino from VTech, can also help kids get excited about math. Play in food or counting mode and the dino responds with sounds and phrases, introducing colors, numbers and shapes. Kids can answer the dino’s questions by feeding a specific food or number of pieces to show what they’ve learned.

Music
Music can stimulate a baby even before they’re born, so be sure to continue the exposure to help form a well-rounded education. Baby and toddler music lessons can improve verbal skills, motor skills and increase confidence.

For an at-home alternative, consider the Grow-Along Music Center, which lets children pretend to be musicians. As they sing into the microphone, five colorful lights correspond to children’s voices, or they can play with wacky voice-changing and amplifying effects. Rock out with three instrument buttons that play guitar, drum and saxophone sounds.

Get Moving
Physical activity is a key building block to coordination and motor skills, and hones brain pathways for smooth, purposeful movement. If little ones are too young to play catch, simply sit on the floor facing each other and roll a ball back and forth. For infants, soft building blocks and other toys can encourage motor development.

You can also encourage movement with toys like the Sit-to-Stand Smart Cruiser, which transforms from a floor play toy with detachable steering wheel activity panel to a ride-on toy. It features driving, learning and music modes that introduce animals, opposites and first words.

It’s never too early to instill a love of learning in children. The sooner you get started, the more you can help enrich their development.

Maritime Academy of Toledo’s CTE Program Grooms High School Students for Lucrative Jobs

By Matt Zaleski
Special to The Truth

In case you haven’t noticed it, northwest Ohio is in the middle of maritime industry resurgence. From new seaport development with the Toledo-Lucas County Port Authority, to the new National Museum of the Great Lakes, to a unique education-to-work program at the Maritime Academy of Toledo aimed at putting cadets to work in the maritime industry after graduation.

The Maritime Academy is a tuition-free, public community school offering college prep courses for cadets in grades five – 12 in a nautical-themed environment. While not a military school, the students are referred to as cadets. The cadets have the opportunity to earn rank with their achievements and successes.

The Maritime Academy’s Career Tech Education (CTE) Program, one of the first of its kind nationally and the first in the State of Ohio, was started in 2009. The CTE Program is possibly one of Toledo’s best kept secrets despite recent success stories.

According to The Maritime Academy, the CTE Program was developed for cadets who wanted a career in the maritime industry. The CTE Program features three years of intensive study in Deck, Engine, and Culinary careers aboard ship. Cadets learn the various career paths in the maritime profession.

In addition to their studies at the Maritime Academy, cadets also attend Owens Community College where they receive hands-on training in welding and other trades aboard ship. In the final year of the CTE Program cadets go through U.S. Coast Guard approved courses like STCW Basic Safety Training which includes Personal Survival Skills, CPR and First-Aid, Social Responsibility, Basic Firefighting Training, Crisis Management, and Crowd Management.

When cadets graduate from the program, they have 50 semester hours of college credit, as well as a Passport, Transportation Worker Identification Card (TWIC), Merchant Marine Credential (MMC), and a background check. After graduation, cadets are ready for entry-level positions aboard ship earning as much as $60,000 a year.

“The Maritime Academy started out with a simple mission to re-introduce our area families to our greatest natural resource -- Our area waterways. But shortly after we opened, companies in the maritime industry found out about the school. They quickly realized that we were training the next generation workforce in the maritime industry,” said Renee Marazon, president, The Maritime Academy.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics predicts a 20 percent job growth in the maritime industry by the year 2020 due to baby-boomers retiring.

Toledo City Councilwoman Theresa M. Gabriel had the opportunity to sail for a week aboard Interlake Steamship’s Paul R. Tregurtha, the largest freighter on the Great Lakes, in September 2013. After talking with crew members Gabriel said there are plenty of job opportunities for young people.

“I talked with both men and women and was amazed at the number of positions available, the salaries they earned, the ports of call they visited, and the even the accommodations and the food they had aboard ship,” she said.

The Henry Brown Story

The Maritime Academy graduated its first CTE Program cadets in May 2012. In August, the Interlake Steamship Company in Cleveland came calling. They needed a relief worker to help cover vacation schedules. Henry Brown applied and was given the opportunity to sail the Great Lakes.

In 22 days as a relief worker, 18-year old Henry made over $4,500. He did such a good job that Interlake invited him back to finish the shipping season. Henry is now in his third season with Interlake Steamship.

The interesting part was that Henry never had to relocate for this position. In the maritime industry, a worker’s home town is his home port and his wages are taxed accordingly. So the taxable income comes back to northwest Ohio.

“The jobs are definitely there for our young people looking for an exciting lucrative career. We held a job fair in May 2013 at The Maritime Academy. Ten of our CTE graduating seniors had the opportunity to work in the maritime industry. One chose to go to the Great Lakes Maritime Academy in Traverse City, MI, some chose to pursue other higher education opportunities, and some wanted to go into the military. The bottom line is the CTE Program is showing them a way up and helping them meet their respective goals,” said Marazon.

The Maritime Academy regularly offers tours of their campus at 803 Water St. in Downtown Toledo. On Wednesday, January 28, from 6 – 8 p.m. the Maritime Academy will offer a community open house. That will include a tour, the opportunity to talk with teachers, and a chance to review the CTE program. For more information, call 419-244-9999 or visit www.maritimeacademy.us
ASSETS Toledo 44th Graduation Ceremony

ASSETS Toledo held its 44th graduation ceremony on Friday, December 5, at the Toledo Mennonite Church. Fifteen current and aspiring entrepreneurs were awarded certificates by Steve Elzinga, board president, and Olivia Holden, executive director.

Rev. Jerome Graham of True Vine Baptist delivered the keynote address.

ASSETS Toledo is a Service for Self Employment Training and Support which provides practical, experience-based training for those starting or expanding a small business. Participants learn the basics of setting up and running a small business and are taught during a 13-week, 50-hour training course, which meets Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Participants complete a business plan workbook which will serve as a blueprint for their business. Hands-on-training is provided by local business professionals and volunteers in the community who teach from an experienced-based approach.

Graham is a graduate of ASSETS Toledo Class of 27 and is an active member of the Alumni Association. He is a marketing consultant at Urban Radio Broadcasting, LLC.

Class 44 graduates were: Jonathan Burke, Clara Brake, Dirk Broersma, Patricia Busch, Jacquelyn Coogler, Yvonna Easterling, Trisha Fench, Victoria Harris, Regina Jefferson, Vannessa Musawwir, Debra Russell, India Smith, Vivian Turski (honorary graduate), Patrick Worthy and Tim Utz.

The students organized this event to honor what would have been Tyler’s 17th birthday. As you may recall, Tyler McIntouch was murdered last July while walking home. Toledo police has not made any arrests in the case. Tyler’s mother, Oleen Clinton, stopped by the school and thanked the students for this show of support. The Maritime Academy of Toledo Foundation has established a reward fund for information leading to the arrest and conviction in this case. The reward fund currently stands at $3,500. If you have any information, you are urged to call Crimestopper at 419-255-1111.
Owens Designated as a 2015 STEM Approved College

Owens Community College has been designated a 2015 STEM JobsSM Approved College by Victory Media, the leader in successfully connecting individuals in transition with education and career opportunities, and creator of STEM JobsSM media, education and career resources for students interested in science, technology, engineering and math.

The 2015 STEM JobsSM Approved Colleges inaugural list is the first of its kind to rate universities, colleges, community colleges and trade schools on their responsiveness and relevance to high-demand, high-growth STEM occupations.

Owens was among over 1,600 schools participating in the STEM JobsSM survey process. Schools submitting surveys were scored on publicly available data and responses to proprietary questions around three key indicators of success: STEM job alignment, STEM job placement, and diversity in a school’s STEM programs. The assessment and rights to the STEM Jobs ApprovedSM Colleges designation were available to qualifying schools at no cost. Owens will be featured in the Winter 2015 issue of STEM JobsSM magazine, along with the entire 2015 list of STEM JobsSM Approved Colleges.

“We are excited and proud to prepare our students for a number of in-demand STEM careers,” said Glenn Rettig, interim dean of the School of Science, Technology, Engineering and Math. “The workplace demand for skilled, creative, problem-solving technicians is greater than it has been in forty years, and the School of STEM can prepare students for a successful career in the field that interests them most. This recognition is a great acknowledgment of our efforts in providing valuable STEM programming.”

For more information about Owens’ commitment to students interested in STEM fields of study and careers, visit www.owens.edu.

About STEM JobsSM Ratings

The STEM JobsSM Approved Colleges survey measures how effectively schools align their programs to high demand, high paying STEM jobs, and how well they assist their students in achieving career aspirations in STEM fields. Ratings are based on a complementary and rigorous quantitative assessment that measures schools on criteria created by Victory Media with the assistance of an independent Academic Advisory Board. A complete description of our methodology, advisory board and services is available at www.stemjobs.com.

About Victory Media

Headquartered in Pittsburgh, Victory Media is a rapidly-growing, veteran-owned business leader connecting individuals in transition with education, business, and career opportunities. For more than 12 years, Victory Media has provided members of the military community with resources and information to evaluate civilian opportunities, while working with thousands of post-secondary schools, employers, and companies looking to get their opportunities, products and services in front of military families during critical life stages.

In 2012, we extended our reach by introducing STEM JobsSM tools, media and curriculum designed to engage students, along with their parents, teachers and guidance counselors, as they make education and career planning decisions. Using student-written articles, fun graphics and relatable content, STEM JobsSM helps students discover how to “do what they love” as a STEM-inspired career. STEM JobsSM now includes the STEM JobsSM Type Quiz for students, STEM JobsSM Approved ratings for schools and employers, and STEM JobsSM Ready lesson plans for teachers. YMCA Central-City Youth Receive Funds for Shopping Spree

On Saturday, December 6, 2014, central-city youth, enrolled in Wayman D. Palmer Community YMCA Child Development after-school care programs or who participate in youth sports programs at the branch, each received money to purchase clothing for themselves during the YMCA’s annual holiday shopping trip.

The shopping trip, and party to follow, was made possible by Edna Vena, who back in 1938, left a generous gift to the YMCA and JCC of Greater Toledo to provide clothing for central-city children during the holiday season.

The children shopped at Walmart on Glendale Ave. from 7:30 – 9:30 a.m. YMCA volunteers and staff were on hand to assist the children with their purchases.

After the shopping trip, the children returned to the Wayman Palmer YMCA, located at 2053 N. 14th St., for a holiday party with fun activities for the children that included a Christmas program and carols to enjoy. The children also met a special guest attending the party, Santa Claus.
Choosing the Right Toys this Holiday Can Help Kids Meet Developmental Milestones

Special to The Truth

This holiday season, keep in mind the notion that what your children play with can have a large impact on their interests and brain development. So when it comes to a walk down the toy aisle, parents are becoming more discerning, leading smart toy-makers to design toys with a learning component that’s equally as important as the fun.

VTech, a world leader in age-appropriate and developmental stage-based electronic learning products for children, works with a team of child development experts to assess toys and provide feedback before reaching store shelves.

The members of VTech’s Expert Panel are offering some helpful holiday shopping hints to parents looking to foster their child’s love of learning:

• Add it up: “Mathematical foundations provide the building blocks for future mathematical success, both in school and beyond,” says Dr. Francis (Skip) Fennell, mathematics educator. “Toys that emphasize numbers, counting and beginning concepts with whole number operations will develop, support and encourage these crucial concepts and skills.”

The Count & Chomp Dino, for example, introduces children to numbers, colors, shapes and foods.

• Age-appropriate: “Children’s brains are developing at a remarkable speed,” says Dr. Lise Eliot, an early childhood development expert. “Their toys should keep up with that growth.”

Keep kids challenged with educational toys that are age-appropriate, so they are never bored or frustrated. Consider child-sized, kid-friendly tablets, such as the InnoTab MAX, that are packed with educational, stage-based learning content.

• Full STEAM ahead: Science, technology, engineering and mathematics (collectively known as STEM) have gained more visibility in schools, along with the addition of arts to form STEAM. However, says Dr. Carla C. Johnson, science and STEM expert, “It is still crucial to cultivate skills in these subjects and implement them in everyday learning. Educational toys can help kids develop self-confidence in the use and application of these important disciplines.”

• Build vocabulary: “Children absorb new information like sponges. Take advantage of their blossoming interests with interactive toys that highlight letters of the alphabet, the sounds letters make and vocabulary,” says Dr. Deborah Sharp Libby, early childhood language and reading expert. “Above all, don’t forget the importance of reading to and with your children often!”

• Choose wisely: “Don’t get carried away with the bells and whistles. You and your kids will quickly look past those. Instead, look for toys that actively engage your kids through technology, by deeply integrating games and learning,” says Dr. Eric Klopfer, platform learning expert.

Remember, each child grows at his or her own pace, and there are few hard and fast deadlines when it comes to a child’s milestones. For a detailed guideline, sorted by age group and area of development, along with other free parenting resources, visit www.vtechkids.com/milestones.

Rep. Alicia Reece Introduces “John Crawford’s Law,” Asks for Meeting with Leading Toy Gun Manufacturers

Ohio State Rep. Alicia Reece (D-Cincinnati) this week sent a letter to popular toy gun manufacturers asking to meet regarding “John Crawford’s Law,” the lawmaker’s bill to prevent fatal tragedies involving toy guns by differentiating toy guns from real firearms.

“The tragic shootings of John Crawford III and Tamir Rice have strained relationships between local communities and the justice system,” said Rep. Reece. “John Crawford’s Law is a small step our state can take right now to help prevent deadly encounters involving kids playing with toy guns.”

Rep. Reece introduced House Bill 681—“John Crawford’s Law”—legislation that would require all BB guns, air rifles and airsoft guns in Ohio be brightly colored or have prominent florescent strips.

“I fully support Ms. Reece in her efforts to pass legislation that would make imitation and actual firearms more easily distinguishable,” said John Crawford, Sr. “This legislation is necessary to make sure that a tragedy like the one that took my son John Crawford III’s life never happens again.”

The bill has 13 co-sponsors and was introduced with the help and support of the Crawford family.

Dear Sirs:

I write to request a meeting with you, fellow lawmakers and community leaders to discuss commonsense solutions that will prevent fatal tragedies involving toy guns. In the past four months in Ohio, two young males – John Crawford, Jr. and Tamir Rice – were shot and killed by law enforcement officers after the replica guns in their possession were mistaken for actual guns. It was only after the tragedy occurred that officials realized the boys posed no threat.

I have introduced Ohio House Bill 681—“John Crawford’s Law”—to require that all BB guns, air rifles and airsoft guns sold in Ohio be brightly colored or have prominent florescent strips. This bill models that of Senate Bill 199 in California, which became law after the fatal shooting of two teenagers by law enforcement officers who also confused toy guns for real firearms.

These tragic misunderstandings have strained relationships between local communities and the justice system. I hope you will agree that it seems appropriate that we develop a strategy to keep our kids and law enforcement officers safe by preventing confusion between perceived and actual threats with firearms.

With your input, I believe we can stop any future tragedies involving kids playing with toy guns and law enforcement officers. Your cooperation and concerns are important to resolving this problem, and I am confident that we can find common ground while making great strides toward developing a solution.

I appreciate your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Alicia Reece
State Representative, Ohio House District 33
President, Ohio Legislative Black Caucus
Your mom and dad take their jobs very seriously.

They get to work on time and they do a good job. Sometimes, they might even stay late to finish a project because it’s important to be responsible. That’s a lesson they’ve taught you because you take your around-the-house jobs seriously, too.

You always do your chores right because people depend on you. But in the new book Memoirs of an Elf by Devin Scillian, illustrated by Tim Bowers, an important job is done correctly because Christmas depends on it!

Memoirs of an Elf by Devin Scillian, Illustrated by Tim Bowers

It’s Christmas Eve, a quarter to 10, and Spark Elf is getting antsy. In just two hours, he and his fellow elves Bobbin and Nutshell will help Santa deliver presents. The reindeer are ready, the sleigh is full, and because he feels “so good,” Spark snaps an elfie.

At quarter to 11, with an hour to go, it starts to snow and that makes Spark really happy. It would make him even happier if Santa would hurry up. Santa says Spark worries too much.

And then it’s “launch time!” Guam and Fiji are first for gift delivery, followed by New Zealand. Santa starts singing his favorite Christmas carol, and he stops to pet every dog. Santa loves dogs, and they love him, but that takes time and there’s none to spare. As Santa plays with a puppy named Tugboat, Spark says it’s time to go.

Spark would love it if you’d leave more gingersnaps.

With nine hours to go, they finish Mexico City. Four hours to go, and they’re done with South America so Santa takes a minute to play with the toys. Spark urges him to hurry. It’s almost Christmas morning...

And with a half-hour to go, they finish!

But there’s something left in Santa’s sack. It’s something very important that someone will miss very, very much. Can St. Nick save Christmas in the nick of time?

Oh my, but there’s all kinds of cute inside Memoirs of an Elf.

Spark Elf may be my new Christmas hero, in fact, because author Devin Scillian gives him a Type-A personality mixed with just the right kind of holiday sweetness. Spark is businesslike and efficient, yet he still appreciates the tiny things that make the Yule cool, and he’s eager to share secrets with kids who are lucky enough to have this book.

But Spark isn’t the only irresistible thing here: I was totally charmed by the illustrations from Tim Bowers. They made me want to read this book all over again.

This is not your traditional Christmas story, but reading it surely could become a new tradition for your family. It’s meant for kids ages five-to-10, but Memoirs of an Elf is serious fun for anyone.
