Revitalizing American Manufacturing and Innovation

By U.S. Senator Sherrod Brown
Guest Column

One of my most important jobs is to advocate for working families in Ohio. Middle-class families have felt squeezed by the number of jobs going overseas, especially in the manufacturing sector. A report released last week from the Economic Policy Institute found that from 2001 to 2013, the U.S. lost 2.4 million manufacturing jobs to China alone.

Ohio has long been a leader in manufacturing, but in order to remain competitive we must invest in the future. That means investing in advanced manufacturing that will help American companies out-compete and out-innovate our foreign competitors. Last week, Congress took a large step toward making that investment by passing my bipartisan legislation, the Revitalize American Manufacturing and Innovation Act (RAMI).

RAMI – which I introduced along with Senator Roy Blunt (R-MO) – would create a National Network for Manufacturing Innovation to establish a public-private partnerships between small businesses, industry leaders, and research institutions, giving them the tools they need to compete on a global scale. These regional, industry-led hubs could create thousands of high-paying, high-tech manufacturing jobs for next-generation workers. The legislation passed both the House and Senate last week, and now heads to the President's desk for final signature.

The Ohio State University's (OSU) Center for Emergent Materials (Center) is a prime example of how collaborative partnerships can bolster manufacturing. The Center – which will receive more than $17 million in funding from the National Science Foundation (NSF) over the next six years – is part of a network of material science labs across the country working together to encourage innovation. The Center also partners with local private enterprises like Lake Shore Cryotronics in Westerville on research and development to advance the field of magneto-electronics. This is the kind of effort that can collaborate with a National Network of Manufacturing Innovation.

Earlier this year, the American Lightweight Materials Manufacturing Innovation Institute (ALMMII) – the sort of National Network for Manufacturing Innovation that will be created by RAMI – was announced by the Administration. Co-led by OSU, the University of Michigan, and Columbus's Edison Welding Institute, this ALMMII will promote advanced lightweight materials technology – efforts that will advance manufacturing, like the technology being developed at the Center for Emergent Materials. This project is estimated to create more than 10,000 new jobs in the next five years. With this investment in our workers and businesses, the United States will once again lead the world in manufacturing and innovation.

The first manufacturing network created was America Makes in Youngstown and President Obama has established other institutes across the country.

Innovation is key to our nation's economic competitiveness. We have the knowledge and expertise right here at home to lead the world in next-generation manufacturing. I'm proud of the message that passing RAMI sends: The United States will not settle for second place when it comes to manufacturing. Made in the USA is here to stay.

Tips to Heat Your Home Affordably This Winter

Special to The Truth

Climate control accounts for almost half the energy use in a typical U.S. home and is also the largest energy expense for most people -- but it doesn't have to be. With a few simple solutions, you can be friendlier toward your wallet and the environment this winter.

Weather-Proof Your Home

Cracks, gaps and joints can cause drafts that will undermine your heating efforts and send your utility bill through the roof. Caulking, insulating and weatherstripping can help curtail the waste so you can enjoy a warmer, more comfortable winter.

Older homes may lack sufficient insulation. Based on where you live and how you currently heat your home, a contractor can help you determine whether your attic, floors and walls need more insulation.

Investigate Heating Alternatives

More than one million U.S. homes are currently heated with pellets, and it's no wonder why -- pellet stoves eliminate 75 percent of the carbon emissions associated with fossil fuel heating. That's roughly three times the impact of driving a hybrid car and saves consumers $400 to $1,500 or more each year, according to the Hearth, Patio & Barbecue Association. Plus, some state and local municipalities even offer a tax credit for heating all or part of a home with biomass fuels.

Additionally, because pellets are made from renewable resources like residual forest waste and agricultural byproducts, they absorb nearly as much carbon growing as they give off when burned, making them carbon neutral, according to the Pellet Fuels Institute.

To maximize cost savings, look for a high efficiency, free-standing pellet stove, like the XXV from Harman Stoves. This stylish pellet stove delivers controlled heat thanks to its distinct cast iron details and advanced room-sensing technology, which automatically adjusts heat output to maintain a consistent room temperature.

You can also cut costs by replacing a drafty, masonry-built fireplace with an insert, like the Harman Accentra 52i which offers powerful and consistent heat with low maintenance and fuel-saving technology.

The Toledo Unit of the NAACP will be holding its General Membership meeting at 1326 Collingwood.

The monthly meeting will take place Tuesday, January 13th at 7 pm. All are welcomed to attend.

To learn more about energy efficient, cost-saving alternatives for home heating, visit www.HarmanStoves.com.

Dress for the Weather

Your extremities are where heat is lost from your body. While wearing gloves indoors is impractical, you should definitely cover up your feet. Invest in a good pair of slippers and some warm socks to keep your feet and the rest of you warm. By dressing warmer indoors, you will be able to keep the overall central heat temperature down, resulting in real cost-savings.

New Windows

Heat loss through windows can account for a whopping 10 to 25 percent of your heating bill, according to the Department of Energy. If you have older, single pane windows, it may be time for an upgrade. Look for double-pane windows that are ENERGY STAR qualified. It's a one-time expense with a true return on investment.

You don't need to feel chilly or uncomfortable in order to lower your energy bills. Take steps to improve your home's energy efficiency.

The Bookworms' Best of 2014

By Terri Schlichenmeyer
The Truth Contributor

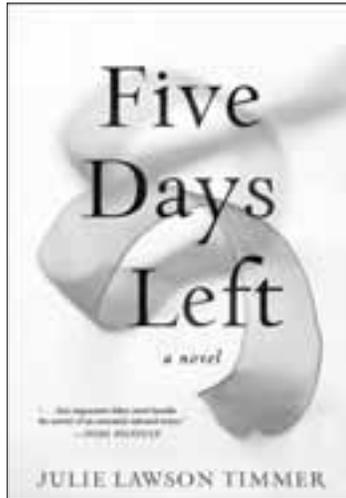

So many books, so little time. It's easy to feel that way when faced with an entire bookstore full of possibilities. How do you pick? How do you know what's good?

Start here, with the Bookworm's Best of 2014...

Let's start with FICTION. Throughout the year, every time something bad happens, you're reminded to hug the ones you love. Five Days Left by Julie Lawson Timmer, the story of a woman who is at the end stages of a terminal disease, and a man in another state who has fallen in love with a child he's fostering, will actually make you want to do that. Bring tissues. That's all I'm saying.

My list wouldn't be complete without my annual nod to Emma Donoghue. Her novel Frog Music, a big story of murder and lust set in 1870s San Francisco is a must-read for this year. It's a gauzy tale – in fact, it seems at times like a dream, as though the main character, Blanche Beunon has imagined the whole friendship she had with Jenny Bonnet and the reason for Jenny's death. Bonus: it's based loosely on a true event.

I almost guarantee that you won't see The Last Time I Died by Joe Nelms on any other Best Of list. It's here because it was one of those books that just struck me: Christian Franco, a loser in life and love, learns that he can re-visit his childhood by being brought back from the edge of death. Early trauma left him with holes in his memory. Reviving gave him answers. But he had to die again and again and you won't be able to put this book down until you know what happens.

They say we all have a doppelganger, and Recognition by O.H. Bennett is based on that idea: on a rainy night, as a young widow heads home to pick up her son, she sees a beggar who is her late husband's double. Many years ago, he went missing and was presumed drowned – but did he? You'll wonder, too...

And finally, a tie: A Wanted Woman by Eric Jerome Dickey and I Am Pilgrim by Terry Hayes are both thrillers; I couldn't decide which I liked better. Be aware that the Dickey book leans toward violence and profanity, while the Hayes book is more espionage-like. Both kept me on the edge of my seat for days...

And then there are my NON-FICTION PICKS...

The Baby Boom by P.J. O'Rourke will bring back memories for anyone born between 1947 and 1964. O'Rourke recalls the usual things that Boomers will remember – playing outside til dark, getting that first Color TV – but the real appeal comes when he finds something you've long-forgotten, and he expounds upon it. This book is like time-travelling to your childhood.

Lovers of the Old (or new) West will love Badluck Way by Bryce Andrews, the story of cowboying, ranch life, and the end of both. It's also a tale of conservation: wolves were a big problem on the ranch where Andrews worked, and they cost his employer a good amount of money. But where's the happy medium between raising cattle and being a steward to the land and its wildlife? This book doesn't have all the answers, but it'll make you think.

I'm normally not a big fan of biographies that include recreations, but Death of a King by Tavis Smiley was a great exception. In this book, Smiley envisions the last year of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.: his friendships, his dilemmas, the heartbreak he knew and caused, the work he did, and that which he might've wished he didn't do. I liked this book because it's thoughtful, and because it makes Dr. King into an ordinary man. Smiley makes King approachable.

If you've read other Best Of lists this year, you've probably found Being Mortal by Atul Gawande there – and for good reason. It's about the end-of-life, aging, and how medicine perceives both. Gawande urges readers to take charge of the end of their lives. That's powerful stuff, in a powerful book.

And lastly, another tie: The Removers by Andrew Meredith, Smoke Gets In Your Eyes by Caitlin Doughty, and The Skeleton Crew by Deborah Halber all deal with bodies. Dead ones. The Meredith book is a father-son memoir in a coming-of-age way; the Doughty book is a memoir about her years working in a crematory; and the Halber book is about how everyday people spend their time comparing missing persons lists with online lists of unclaimed bodies. I liked 'em all. I couldn't decide ...

And then my Best of CHILDREN'S BOOKS:

For the littlest kid, Don't Push the Button by Bill Cotter is a near-guaranteed gigglefest. There's a monster inside this book, and a red button. Whatever you do, well, read the book with your favorite three-to-six-year old and see.

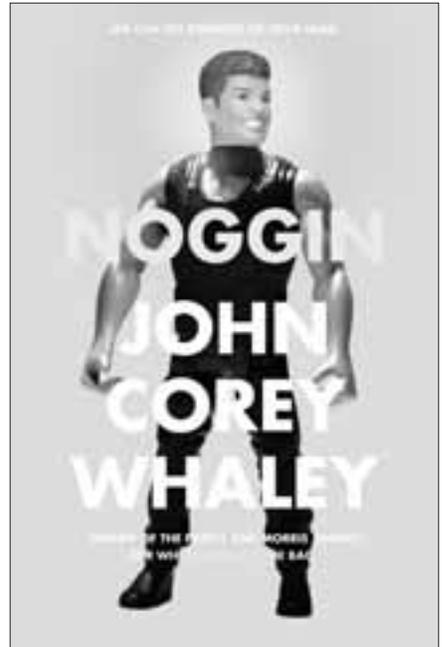

Post-apocalyptic novels have been done to death, but H2O by Virginia Bergin really struck me as unusual. The premise of this book is that planetary dust has caused contaminated rain. Anybody who gets wet dies – bloody, painfully, and fast. That includes the heroine's parents, sibling, friends, neighbors, and everyone she loves. Or maybe not, because there's a wicked cliffhanger here and I loved it.

I also liked Noggin by John Corey Whaley, a disturbingly plausible book about a young man who's suffering a terminal illness. His only hope is to have his head cryonically frozen and to wait for a donor body. But can everybody in his life wait for him to return?

As I read Endangered by Jean Love Cush, I wasn't sure whether or not it was an adult book or a teen read. I decided it was both: it's the story of a young teen who gets arrested for a murder he didn't commit, but it's also the story of his mother, who tackles the justice system, the law, and everything she never thought she'd have to deal with on behalf of her son. Timely and sobering, this is another one of those books you just can't put down.

And finally, Skink No Surrender by Carl Hiaasen is a great way to introduce your teen to the humor of this adult author. In this book, a teen goes missing and it's up to her cousin and a Vietnam-veteran-former-mayor-possibly-insane-conservation-minded madman to find her. What's not to like, hm?

And there you are: 15 books you just can't miss. The Best of the Year. Happy Reading!

AKA's Hold Holiday Luncheon at Kent Branch

Special to The Truth

On December 13, 2014, members of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Incorporated®, Zeta Alpha Omega Chapter held a festive holiday luncheon at the Kent Branch Library following their monthly chapter meeting. Members enjoyed Christmas music, fellowship and a delicious lunch including the famous "green cake" prepared by Vice President Margaret Huntley.

The Zeta Alpha Omega Chapter was chartered in Toledo, Ohio on April 25, 1952 in the home of Reba Harris. Charter members Helen Cohen and Anna Marie Bolden are still active in the chapter. The chapter hosted a fall fundraiser held at Holland Gardens with proceeds to benefit scholarships to local high school seniors and community service endeavors.

Chapter leadership includes President Katina Johnson and Vice President Margaret Huntley. Zeta Alpha Omega is a graduate chapter and supervises two undergraduate chapters—Iota Iota at Bowling Green State University and Alpha Lambda at the University of Toledo. Danielle Avery and Richelle Watkins are the graduate advisors, respectively.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Incorporated® was founded on January 15, 1908 on the campus of Howard University. This year marks 107 years of sisterhood and service. In July 2014 the organization installed Dorothy Buckhanan Wilson as international president who will lead 60,000 members worldwide.

The 2014-2018 International Programs, "Launching New Dimensions of Service", includes Target 1- Educational Enrichment-Target 2-Health Promotion, Target 3-Family Strengthening, Target 4-Environmental Ownership and Target 5-Global Impact. MTV Host Zuri Hall Visits Shapemy Jeans

By Carla Yvette

MTV Host Zuri Hall during her personal fitting by Alesia and Arlinda of Shapemy Jeans

After serving as grand marshal for this year's Holiday Parade held November 15, Toledo native and Emmy award winning MTV host, Zuri Hall, took the time to be fitted for a pair of handmade custom jeans by the mother and daughter team of Shapemy Jeans, Alesia and Arlinda Lawson. "I'm obsessed with wearing jeans so when my uncle Chauncey Whitehead who is friends with the owners suggested I check them out I didn't hesitate." Said Hall

Hall, a 2006 graduate of Maumee Valley Country Day School, started her career at a local television station in Indianapolis upon graduation from The Ohio State University. In addition to hosting for MTV, Hall has appeared on E!'s "Fashion Police" and Vh1's "Big Morning Buzz LIVE" and hosted the show Million Dollar Maze Runner. She currently resides in New York City.

Local 500's Christmas Party

On Friday, December 19, 2014, LIUNA Laborers' Local 500 celebrated the holidays and their membership with a Christmas Party with maximum capacity at Gesu's Sullivan Center. Local 500 stands on the principle of giving all year long and has donated to many worthwhile organizations. The leader and business manager of this organization, David Fleetwood, acknowledges the highs and lows of the construction industry but takes every opportunity to let his membership know that they are appreciated.

One way is in this now greatly anticipated Annual Christmas Party. The membership, their guests and several local dignitaries were treated to a spectacular soul food style buffet including carving stations and wonderful desserts by Chef Marla, music by an extraordinary band The Jamm, DJ Impress playing great dance music between sets, and of course an array of holiday spirits.

This year, David Fleetwood, on behalf of the membership introduced their "Distinguished Lifetime Service Award" to honor someone who has been a proven leader in the community and is also considered a friend of Local 500. This inaugural award was given to Jack Ford who has been successful not only as Toledo city councilman, Ohio State representative and mayor of Toledo, but also as someone who lives every day of his personal life showing us all what it means to serve others.

Local 500 wishes everyone a safe and prosperous new year!

Former gang members Devonne Fagan, current D4D board member and owner of Pinnacle Autobody, and Dedra Brown helped organize the event. Brown, Founder of David Davis Youth Center, an after school program with a focus on intervention and prevention on gangs and bullying, lost her brother to gang violence and says she partnered with Ross and Haynes because her passion is to help children avoid the life she lived.

Former gang leader Willie Knighten, Facilitator and case manager for The Ridge Project, an organization that specializes in healthy families, responsible fatherhood and healthy marriage along with men of TYRO, an accountability community for ex-offenders, says they were honored to be a part of the event when approached by organizers and donated over $200 in toys to help less fortunate children.

The event started with a children's basketball game between the Count Change Celtics and Team Early Bird before the featured D4D games. Performances by the Scott High school dance team, The Imagine Clay Drill and Drumline, aspiring rapper Yung Jo Jo and The Flintstone Kids entertained the crowd of over 500 between games.

Dunkin 4 Donations – From Gangs to Giving Back

By Carla Yvette
Society Editor

Five years since their first Dunkin 4 Donations (D4D) Benefit Concert and Tournament, founders David “GUTTADAVE” Ross and Tracy Haynes are still making a difference in their community.

“Round 5” of Dunkin 4 Donations was held December 21 at Scott High School’s Ben E. Williams Field House. Founded under the brand, Hands Over Hearts, the basketball charity event is held each year to raise money and collect toys for local shelters and less fortunate and needy families.

The purpose is also to show central-city youths positive role models and positive alternatives. Ross says, “What we’re doing is showing the community what can happen when we come together. Instead of protesting and tearing up our own neighborhoods, let’s come together and build up our own people.”
