Natural hair is deeply rooted in African American culture, but its branches are many and far reaching. From products to events to apparel to art, it has become an industry that is growing rapidly each day around the world.

For some, natural hair is a style and for others, it is a lifestyle. Likewise, for some, going natural is a journey and, for others, they are owning it as a business. No matter the branch we find ourselves perched upon, we are connected at the root and, at the root, is the culture behind natural hair and the possibilities this new industry is presenting.

There are several classes, social gatherings and other events that are taking place year-round right here in Toledo to engage the natural hair community.

The Kitchen Salon, whose motto has been "A gathering place for natural hair enthusiasts" established itself in 2007 to be a natural hair care resource in northwest Ohio. The practice of women gathering in their kitchens or parlors (also called salons in European parlance) has been taking place for generations. Hair care practices have also been carried out in kitchens around the world while "the kitchen" is also the household name for the kinkiest hair located at the nape of the neck.

How can you tap into the local natural hair community? You can visit Thekitchensalon.com, which is a website dedicated to providing comprehensive information on natural hair and locked hair care.

The website covers topics from how to deal with a sore scalp to finding remedies for hair loss and even how to maintain locs at home. On the site, you can also shop for handmade natural hair products, created with natural and organic ingredients from local vendors.

If you aren’t someone who goes online often, there are classes being offered at The Kitchen Salon’s studio in South Toledo. Classes held most recently include head wrapping, a twistout workshop, and hair locking 101.

If you are a natural who is comfortable with your hair, there is The Toledo Afro Club, which is a group for naturals who attend classes and events beyond learning about natural hair care. This summer, there was an introduction to yoga class, an eyebrow clinic, and there is a monthly Curlfriends Crochet Circle, where club members are being taught how to read crochet patterns and create their own accessories.

Supporting causes is also a part of the TAC, where donations were collected and presented to The Bethany House, Family House Shelter, ... continued on page 6

Community Clean Up Day

By Carla Yvette

Youth ages two-to-17 participated in Community Clean Up Day, September 12 on Marmion Avenue. Dedra Brown of David Davis Youth Center and Rodney Love came up with the idea as a way of teaching youth the importance of keeping their neighborhoods clean.

Brown said, “I really didn’t know how it was going to turn out but to have young people and city officials come out and support was awesome.” Toledo City Councilman Tyrone Riley made sure the city filled in pot holes in the area beforehand so the children wouldn’t get hurt.

Money from sponsors and community donations helped purchase supplies and a portion was also designated to pay the youth for their hard work but, according to Brown, some of the youth gave it back. “Some of the boys and girls came out to earn community service hours and others just enjoyed meeting and getting to know one another.”

Brown says she hopes the project gains momentum and moves from community to community. “One of the youth involved asked if we could go to his neighborhood and I told him yes!” She adds, “but we as a community need to make it happen.”

The sponsors were: North End Hand Wash and Detail Shop, People’s Missionary Baptist Church, NAACP, Keep Toledo Lucas County Beautiful and community donors.

If you would like help cleaning up your neighborhood you may contact Dedra Brown at 419-514-9826. If you would like to make a donation to help fund future Community Clean Up Days you may do so at the Toledo Urban Credit Union David Davis Youth Center.

Etiquette in the 21st Century: Because Manners Matter

By Robin Reeves
Soulcial Scene Contributor

Is etiquette a thing of the past?
I’ve been asked this question over and over again and my answer is and will always be NO, etiquette is not a thing of the past.

Even though times have changed from those days when marriage was only between a man and a woman, when there was no conference call for meetings, when families ate dinner together, when open-toe shoes were not allowed in the office, when men removed their hats inside the church and restaurant, when having a conversation did not include social media and acronyms like SMH, IDK, LMBO when leggings were not worn as pants …

Well, you get my point. Things have changed, even the word “etiquette” is not as popular as it once was. However, the concept of proper etiquette is still very much required and desperately needed today in the social and professional scene.

So, what is etiquette? Etiquette is that group of social behaviors or proprieties of conduct established in any class or community or for any occasion. It is the ability to make others feel comfortable with you in whatever environment you are in. It is your ability to demonstrate decorum.

It is a set of mostly unwritten rules such as the one many of our parents in my community taught us when we were children: “be home before the street lights come on.” As children we knew the consequences of not following that unwritten rule.

Who has etiquette? I’m glad you asked. Everyone has a form of etiquette but not every form of etiquette is appropriate everywhere. Let’s look at three personal vs. professional etiquette tips. The unwritten rules of etiquette we establish in our homes or community, like the one I mentioned above, may be different or not even exist in other homes, communities or with people in your workplace.

So be aware, the rules may be different wherever you go. In your workplace hard skills such as a degree, certifications, experience, resume etc…may have gotten you the job and is a common denominator among the employees but your etiquette skills like communication, relationship development, respect for self and others, dependability, trustworthiness, and more, are what will help you keep the job.

Social skills in the workplace are needed but be careful not to cross the line. For example, first, body language is a form of communication. Second, in your personal life you may isolate yourself and think no one is affected by your behavior. In your professional life, if you isolate yourself you may be perceived as not being a team player, lacking relationship development skills, appearing not trustworthy or worse.

Third and finally, in your personal life we have the option to dress in a way that expresses our personality and creative side and many times the way others perceive us does not matter this is who we are. In our professional life, the dress code can usually be found in the employee handbook.

Not complying with this written rule may indicate that you are non-cooperative, have a hidden agenda, or just don’t care. This may or may not cause you your job but it can hinder your ability to move up in the company or take advantage of other opportunities that can increase the value you add to your company.

I would not be surprised if you were already aware of the three etiquette tips I just shared with you. As I mentioned earlier proper etiquette is not new however research has shown that employers are spending nearly 20 percent of their operating cost to replace employees due to lack of workplace etiquette skills. Employers are looking for the entire package in their employees: hard skills and soft skills (etiquette).

On September 1, 2015 Lucas County declared September National Workforce Development Month. What are you doing to increase your workforce development etiquette skills? Let us know.

I will end this article with a quote from President Obama “For all the cruelty and hardship of our world we are not mere prisoners of fate. Our actions matter and can bend history in the direction of justice.”

Reeves Etiquette & Image Consulting LLC. teaches etiquette and image skills that empower children and adults to build relationships and success with confidence, personal integrity and respect (C.P.R.). We show how the soft skills of etiquette and image can strengthen families, increase earnings and build communities.

Macomber/Whitney Meet and Greet

By Carla Yvette

The Macomber/Whitney class of 1985 held their 30th class reunion at Our Brothers Place September 4. Inspired by the highly popular, much anticipated Scott Bulldog weekend, Macon Travis Grant, a 1990 graduate of Macomber/Whitney, decided to use the 30th class reunion as an opportunity to start the discussion for their first “Macmen” weekend.

Classes 1987-1991 were invited to a Macomber/Whitney meet and greet to get together, catch up and start planning for the event. According to Grant, the 2016 Macmen weekend will take place Labor Day weekend in collaboration with Our Brothers Place Block Party.
The Blackout Party: The Event You’ve Been Waiting For

Kerry Emery and Ryan Glaze presented The Blackout Party, September 19 at Club Evolution. Over 200 Guests decked in an array of black styles ate, drank and danced as DJ Big Lou Da Mayor pumped out music from the 80’s and 90’s.

“The Blackout Party was all about bringing the 40 plus crowd out to have a great time,” said Emery. “There’s nothing like reminiscing about the 80’s and 90’s with a group of friends who share some of the same memories. We all love the music as it was music for the soul. It had meaning, it was fun, it’s OLD SCHOOL!”

A 50/50 raffle and give-aways took place throughout the night.
Eddie M. Cole – and Company – Celebrate His 95th

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

Eddie M. Cole arrived in Toledo in 1946 after he had completed his service in World War II and has been a member of Braden United Methodist ever since. The congregation of that church joined him after service this past Sunday to celebrate his 95th birthday – a milestone he has reached with grace, good humor and an unflinching desire to be of service to his community – according to those who spoke to the congregation during the celebration.

“He and the love of his life, Edrene Benson Cole, love and loved our community and Braden Church,” said Toledo City Councilwoman Theresa M. Gabriel who has known Cole since the day he arrived in Toledo.

Cole finished his undergraduate education here in Toledo and earned his law degree from the University of Toledo in 1951. He practiced law in town for 60 years, retiring in 2011 and, as a lawyer, was selected Outstanding Toledo Lawyer by the UT Law Alumni Association; was selected to the Hall of Fame of the National Bar Association and has had a scholarship established in his honor to the UT College of Law that is awarded annually.

“Eddie is a template that any young attorney could follow,” said fellow attorney Lafe Tolliver who recalled his own days as a young attorney seeking the advice and counsel that Cole would so generously dispense. That advice, noted attorney and City Councilman Tyrone Riley, was always “well thought out.”

Another attorney, James Carlisle, praised Cole for his devotion to the community and to the brotherhood of local lawyers. Cole, said Carlisle, “is a quintessential example of a man blessed with time.”

Also addressing the Braden congregation was Cole’s son, Edwin L. Cole, Larome Myrick of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity and Ricky Willis of Triumph Lodge #23.

The short speeches of praise were interspersed with selections by the Harper Male Chorus, particularly appropriate because Cole has been so active in the Braden United Methodist Men over the years.

Cole wrapped up the Sunday tribute and offered thanks to all for the effusive praise as he recalled some of the difficulties experienced during his youth.

“We are celebrating not only my birthday,” said Cole. “But also the progress we’ve made throughout America.”
Toledo Fair Housing Center and City of Toledo Department of Neighborhoods

Host Fair Housing Implementation Council Kickoff

Special to The The Truth

Toledo Fair Housing Center and the City of Toledo Department of Neighborhoods partnered to host the Fair Housing Implementation Council (the Council) Kickoff. The event was held on Friday, September 25, beginning with a news conference at Toledo Fair Housing Center at 10 a.m., and followed by the Council kickoff at United Way of Greater Toledo, located at 424 Jackson St., Toledo, OH 43604, Rooms A&B.

Approximately 50 stakeholders from across the community attended, including representatives from local government, nonprofit, and the housing industry, as well as community members and advocates. By forming a collaboration across key sectors, the Council aims to effectively address barriers to fair housing in our community and increase participation in the Fair Housing Action Plan.

Every five years, Toledo Fair Housing Center and the City of Toledo develop a Fair Housing Action Plan (Action Plan). In an effort to address barriers to fair housing, the Action Plan identifies impediment areas that may inhibit one’s access to housing of their choice.

Examples of such barriers include transportation, reentry after incarceration, homeless services, foreclosure, and public policies. Each impediment area contains corresponding goals and actions steps designed to overcome the impediment.

“This is a comprehensive strategy to expand housing opportunities in the City of Toledo,” said Michael Marsh, president and CEO of Toledo Fair Housing Center. “Our goal is to broaden this to a regional effort, and we invite other communities in our area to partner with us to develop ways to ensure equal access to housing and, therefore, access to opportunity.”

Bonita Bonds from the City of Toledo Department of Neighborhoods commended Toledo Fair Housing Center for setting the example for other communities, stating, “Our Fair Housing Center is way ahead of the game compared to other jurisdictions.”

One of the goals of the Council is to advocate for legislative changes necessary to provide protection for source-of-income, currently not recognized as a protected class. While attempting to rent a house with his wife, Kevin Tucker encountered a landlord who had previously refused to rent to a tenant receiving housing assistance and who denied the Tuckers the opportunity to rent once she discovered he had previously lived in public housing.

Having his security deposit returned to him, Tucker realized the landlord was considering factors aside from his ability to pay rent. “We thought, this isn’t right. We’re trying to make a better life for ourselves,” Tucker added.

Although an investigation was conducted, Toledo Fair Housing Center was unable to file a complaint because source-of-income is not a protected class.

“It’s important to recognize that many people have nontraditional means of income: social security, disability or military benefits, child support, or housing choice vouchers (public housing assistance). As long as a person can prove their ability to pay, it shouldn’t matter where the money comes from, and they shouldn’t be denied the right to housing,” explained Marsh.

A regulation issued by HUD in July reminds communities of their responsibility to Affirmatively Further Fair Housing, or proactively take steps to develop inclusive policies and overcome historic patterns of segregation.

“This partnership represents the City of Toledo’s commitment to expanding housing opportunities, and we are grateful for their support,” said Marsh.

But in order to achieve broad impact, we need other communities to come to the table. We have already met with the Lucas County Commissioners and the City of Oregon and look forward to joining them and other local areas to ensure members of our community have the chance to be successful.”

The Council is a means to help implement the Action Plan by plugging community partners into appropriate areas where they can effect change. Today’s kickoff included the formation of separate committees to focus on each impediment area. Committees plan to meet on a quarterly or as-needed basis, while the full Council will only meet a few times a year.

The Big Show: Winners and Losers

By Rev. Donald L. Perryman, D.Min.

The classic function of the theater is to project and illuminate the feelings and concerns of the community which sustains it.

- Robert Abrahams

The Blade, University of Toledo mayoral Internet debate held last week at UT’s Doerrmann Theatre, minus a live audience, was more a theatrical production than political policy debate. In essence, the event was a question and answer session that afforded The Blade staff the opportunity to ask candidates the sticky questions which they may have been dodging over time.

There were in my opinion, clear winners and losers.

One obvious winner was Sandy Spang. The recently-elected councilwoman was extremely knowledgeable over a broad range of issues and possessed a comfortable familiarity with the processes of municipal government that belie her short tenure on City Council.

Unlike the other candidates, Spang also understood the true context of the “production” and spoke directly to the cameras rather than responding to The Blade’s panel of writers. Spang brings support from a wide spectrum of political perspectives.

Another clear winner in the “debate” was former Mayor Mike Bell.

Bell, leveraging the reputation of his parents in the community and his past public service, provided a credible rebuttal to uncomfortable questions of personal character generated by accusations made on social media by a younger woman who claimed the former mayor groped her at a bar.

Bell was also convincing in expressing his change of heart in supporting the anti-union SB5 bill as he explained his rational for originally supporting the legislation. Remorseful, he will now “respect the will of the citizens” rather than relying on his own thoughts of what is best.

Ohio Governor John Kasich has proven that politicians can survive support of the anti-union SB5 bill as he explained his rational for originally supporting the legislation. Remorseful, he will now “respect the will of the citizens” rather than relying on his own thoughts of what is best.

Ohio Governor John Kasich has proven that politicians can survive support of the anti-union SB5 bill as he explained his rational for originally supporting the legislation. Remorseful, he will now “respect the will of the citizens” rather than relying on his own thoughts of what is best.

Another loser is former three-term mayor Finkbeiner, who was not politically astute in addressing the anti-LGBT sentiment of the audience.

Finkbeiner has spun the alleged accusations of verbal and emotional abuse of staff as “leadership.”

Who were the losers?

Hicks-Hudson, Spang and Drabik-Collins, far-left progressive votes are likely to be split among Hicks-Hudson and Drabik-Collins, who have been on the losing end of litigation against civil rights of individuals, provisionally, are also concerned with how the former mayor treats his staff. Finkbeiner, with a 1.8 percent deficit upon leaving his most recent term. Community leaders, and others, right-shoulder, are also concerned with how the former mayor treats his staff. Finkbeiner, who has been on the losing end of litigation against civil rights of individuals, provisionally, has spun the alleged accusations of verbal and emotional abuse of staff as “leadership,” but others have characterized his management style as “tyrannical.”

“I don’t think I need to go into how he treats his staff, and for the people who sit there and say, ‘Well this is the type of leadership we need.’ No, it’s not,” lamented a person close to a rival campaign. “That is not leadership. That is being a boss, and there’s a difference between being a boss and being a leader. The boss is a person who sits up on the 22nd floor and tells people what to do, cracking a whip. So the boss is the one that’s sitting there ordering the horses to go. The leader is the one who’s in there with the horses pulling the cart, working with the team, steering the ship with them, that’s a leader. Carter is not a leader. And he’s already said, he’s like ‘I’m only gonna be in for two years,’ he said, ‘I’m only gonna do two years.’ Again, it’s not any type of continuity, and continuity is what the city needs right now, given our budget challenges,” adds the campaign volunteer.

Yet, despite the candidates’ “Showtime performances,” a recent poll puts Cartly (25.8 percent) and Bell (25.3 percent) in a statistical tie for the lead in election outcome projections. Hicks-Hudson (15.5 percent), Drabik-Collins (14.5 percent), and Spang (9.5 percent) follow at a distance.

With 20,000 new voters in addition to the expected 50,000 expected to show up because of Issue 3, the Blade-UT debate was more meaningless practice run than significant dress rehearsal.

What is certain, however, is that if current Mayor Hicks-Hudson is to be successful in retaining her office, then both the Ohio and Lucas County Democratic Party must step up and make their support for her real instead of merely a “role-playing performance.”

Hyundai Hope On Wheels Award $10.5 Million in the Month of September, Surpassing $100 million in Lifetime Funding in the Battle Against Pediatric Cancer

September is National Childhood Cancer Awareness Month – a time to bring awareness to childhood cancer and to recognize the young lives impacted by the disease.

While pediatric cancer is relatively rare and research has created cure rates upwards of 80 percent, pediatric cancer remains the leading cause of death by disease for children in the United States. There are over 15,000 new cases diagnosed each year and one in five of these children will not survive the disease.

During this month, Hope On Wheels will donate $10.5 million to 45 Children’s Oncology Group (COG) hospitals and institutions across the U.S. in support of continued medical research and programs that improve the quality of life for children with cancer.

At the U.S. Capitol, Hope On Wheels will be joined by members of the Congressional Childhood Cancer Caucus and other elected officials, policymakers, Hyundai executives and dealers, to pay tribute to researchers, child cancer fighters and their families as part of its annual September program.

Hope On Wheels 2015 Scholar Grant winners from institutions across the country will be in attendance. Special recognition will be given to greater Washington, D.C. metro area hospitals that are receiving research grants this year including Children’s National Health System, Sidney Kimmel Comprehensive Cancer Center at Johns Hopkins University and Georgetown University’s Lombardi Comprehensive Cancer Center.

At Home With Mary Louise – Season After Season!

Autumn leaves are falling from the trees and that means that it’s time to welcome the holiday season and start preparing the home for Halloween.

When I was a child, my grandmother – Tudda, we called her – would look out the back door at her yard staring at the trees and watching the leaves gently falling to the ground.

Tudda would say “girls, it’s time for Halloween.” My sisters and I would get so excited, just overwhelmed. We knew it was time to decorate our home for Halloween – such fun memories.

We also knew it was that time of the year when our grandmother would bake her famous sweet potato pies. My goodness! As my sisters and I decorated, we could smell the pies baking in the oven. My sisters and I could not wait to sink our teeth into the pies topped with homemade whipped cream and doused with a cold glass of milk.

I am very much Tudda’s grandchild especially when it comes to the holidays. I keep the traditions alive that she honored by decorating and baking for each and every holiday. I absolutely love celebrating all our holiday events.

I believe that when decorating there should always be a focal point in the center of your home – an area your guests will see when first entering your home. My home’s focal point is my living room mantle.

I love decorating the mantle with candles, mini pumpkins and corn stalks with orange ribbons for Halloween. It gives the home a warm welcome feeling.

Pumpkins of all sizes and materials, gourds and bright orange ribbons are key elements of the Halloween theme and easily obtained at many different stores – most of the decorations can be stored for the following years.

And please don’t forget the decorative wreath on the front door welcoming your guests. You don’t have to wait for the Christmas holiday to bring out the wreath!!

This week, I’m going to share my grandmother’s famous sweet potato pie recipe for Halloween – from my kitchen to yours.

Grandmother’s Sweet Potato Pie

Ingredients

- 1/3 cup of butter – softened
- ½ cup – sugar
- 2 eggs – lightly beaten
- ¾ cup evaporated milk
- 2 cups mashed sweet potatoes

- ¼ tsp salt

Preparation

Turn over down to 350 degrees. Bake pie for 35-40 minutes or until a knife inserted near the center comes out clean.

Cool and refrigerate

A Breast Cancer Survivor’s Story: Barbara Hampton

As Told to Carla Yvette

It is hard to imagine what women who are diagnosed with breast cancer go through. It is my hope that those facing this diagnosis will find comfort, encouragement and inspiration from others who’ve been through it . . . and survived.

Barbie’s Journey:

In December 2008, I went for my first mammogram and there were no concerns. But only three weeks later, during my own self-examination, I discovered a lump. I went to bed knowing it wouldn’t be there the next day; however, when I awoke, the lump was still there. An immediate call to the doctor’s office was the beginning of the next 18-month journey of tears, fear, anger and treatments.

My doctor confirmed my self-diagnosis of the lump and set up an appointment for a biopsy to be performed within the next few days. When I left the hospital on Wednesday, I was advised that I would receive the results by that following Monday. However, my heart sank when my phone rang on Friday hearing the doctor on the other end informing me that my results were back and they requested I come to the office on Monday….and bring a family member.

In a time of disbelief, nervousness, uncertainty my heart sank further, and I started to cry. My co-workers took over my work, helping me to get on my way. On January 12, 2009, I was given my diagnosis of breast cancer with my mother and sister at my side. This, of course, was devastating news. Cancer doesn’t run in my family, so I didn’t know what to expect. The doctors passionately assisted me through my journey. February 13, 2009 was the date of my surgery to remove my lump.

Going through chemotherapy, radiation and losing my hair was the toughest time that I had to endure. My mother reminded me often that I was strong and I could, and would, survive this. At one point, I did experience a scare during my radiation treatment. I felt like I was having a heart attack.

After spending a week going through many tests, I was finally released on the Friday before the Susan Komen Walk for the Cure. I was determined to participate that Sunday. Since, I had just gotten out of the hospital, I was asked to ride in the trolley that started the race off. The experience was so overwhelmingly emotional that I will never forget that feeling. With God’s help and prayer, I made it through. I AM A SURVIVOR!

I would like to thank my family, friends and co-workers that supported me and continue to do so every single day. Special thank you to my daughter Shayla, who was on my side every minute of the day.
