Raising Black Children: A Mothers’ Day Reflection

By Rev. Donald L. Perryman, D.Min.

...I am my mother’s daughter, and the drums of Africa still beat in my heart. They will not let me rest while there’s a single Negro boy or girl without a chance to prove his worth.

-Mary McLeod Bethune

In what is, arguably, the most important story in the Hebrew Scriptures, it is women who occupy center stage. They are wise, resourceful, and courageous. They also are able – in the performance of everyday “typical” female tasks – to pull off a quiet “righteous revolution.” It was, what religious scholar Cheryl Kirk-Duggan calls, a “spiritual subversion,” that undermined the violent consequences of a public policy designed to thwart the ability of a minority people to survive and thrive.

In that ancient text in the biblical Book of Exodus, children of a certain race, religion and culture were born under a death sentence, the state having decreed that they be thrown into the river to die. Rather than allowing a racist, classist and patriarchal system to dictate a deadly outcome for her son, however, the mother of the child Moses, along with a cadre of other life-affirming women (we hear nothing from Moses’ father after his birth), acted courageously to defy the oppression.

With millions of black children dying physically or psychologically from the disease of “nihilism” as a result of being represented at the top of nearly every negative social and economic statistic, it is critical that we find ways to radically undermine the current systems that contribute to the deaths of so many young people.

How do we protect our children from systemic threats designed to kill their sense of meaning, purpose and intrinsic value and which ultimately destroys black boys and girls themselves?

The actions of these “conscientious objectors” of the past provide several lessons that inform those who are raising black children today or will tomorrow.

First, Moses’ mother hid or shielded him. Perhaps the most important task of parenting requires the shielding of children from negativity (from within and without), negative peer pressure and low societal expectations by providing spirituality, education, healthy activities and positive enrichment.

Healthy shielding fosters positive self-esteem and makes children feel good about themselves. Education needs to go beyond what is taught in the schools and include African and African-American culture and discussions on the reality of racial and other discriminations, patriarchy, the criminal justice system and mass incarceration. Parental and community education should also be provided that teaches respect, responsibility and resilience.

Next, this “activist” African mother in antiquity, using ingenuity and sacrifice, crafted a boat from papyrus, pitch and tar with the purpose of giving the baby Moses an opportunity to survive by “floating on the mainstream” – the same system that was providing a death experience for oppressed minorities.

Black children need to obtain exposure beyond their ordinary experiences. Children who are able to survive systematic oppression intact are those more likely to be involved in activities such as athletics, church, dance classes, music, art or other activities outside of the school classroom.

Of course, there is a cost for the extra curricular activities that keep children safe, so mothers of old used creativity and took up extra work to make participation possible. Black mothers have always gone to work and used ingenuity to make sure that their children could “float and not be consumed by the river” whether it included chopping cotton, cleaning homes, emptying bed pans, preparing meals, waiting tables or manning fast food counters. For certain, we cannot afford to keep losing this many black children to the system without personal sacrifice and hard work.

Third, when Moses could no longer be hidden, his mother placed him in the boat she made (instead of bought), placed it on the river and positioned his sister Miriam to quickly enter the scene when summoned by Pharaoh’s daughter. Moses, in the performance of everyday “typical” female tasks – to assist in “drawing” (liberating?) the child from the water. And because you can only liberate children that you love, respect and understand (Kunjufu, 2005), Miriam was able to persuade the royal daughter to utilize the baby’s own mother to provide daycare and preschool educational services.

We Want A King Like The Other Nations!

By Lafe Tolliver, Esq

There is a remarkable and almost compatible contemporary story in the Bible that may resonate with the current and hostile political climate that we are eyewitnesses to in the US of A.

In the Bible book of First Samuel, the nation of Israel was envious of the surrounding heathen kingdoms in which the people swore allegiance to a king and were thus ruled by an earthly master. Ostensibly to the on looking Israelites, having a king whom they could see and feel was a better bargain than a God who dwelt in the heavens and spoke via the prophets during that time of their history.

The Israelites were jealous and envious of those kingdom dwellers who had a king and they wanted to be like them and thus eschew the obligations and decrees that God has bestowed upon them by the Ten Commandments and other laws including worship protocols and dietary requirements.

To their way of thinking, if they could jettison this God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, they would have more freedoms and could have a say in how they were governed as opposed to the fiat laws of God.

A God that has repeatedly and amply demonstrated his love and care and concern for them but such a covenant-making God set out requirements or demands of them that they believed an earthly king would not do.

They were willing and anxious to exchange the known for the unknown because, to their way of thinking, freedoms from God was what other nations had around them and they were influenced by that type of pagan living and lifestyles.

In that Bible story, the exchange between the people who longed for a king and a God who longed for them to be his people, reached a crescendo when God acquiesced to their pleadings and allowed them a king.

That king was named Saul.

On the exterior Saul was eye candy to the people. Big, strong, of a good family and of a good reputation (at least at that time!).

Saul was what you would call today, photogenic. He projected strength and leadership and with him, the Israelites could have a king that they could boast about to the surrounding heathen nations and thus become like them in how they were governed.

So God had his faithful prophet Samuel anoint Saul king of Israel and thus began the ending of the era of God's blessings. The battle was tragic and Saul and his soldiers were overwhelmed and Saul intentionally fell upon his sword and forfeited his life.

Now, speed dial to the year 2016. What are the comparisons you say?

I’ll be brief and to the point. Ostensibly, America was founded on Judeo-Christian principles of a nation under God and a nation that boasted, “In God We Trust!”

From those principles, Americans have touted religious liberties and individual freedoms being the hallmark of our democracy. Yes, I know the double standard and lies when it came to the freedoms of black people and we being equal and under the fair governance of law but that is for another column.

White America boasted of its goodness and fairness and was a beacon to the world of being a champion of the oppressed and those who yearn for freedom. Why, they even put such a catchy phrase to that effect on the Statue of Liberty.

Millions of immigrants took that slogan at face value and poured into this country and out of the “melting pot” (note: black folks didn’t melt so well!) a nation was born and a nation that present day evangelicals boast about being, “A shining city on a hill.”

That shine is tarnished and maybe even snuffed out due to this “freedom loving and evangelical” nation gone a’ whoring after strange gods.

No stranger god has been a petulant, arrogant, bullying billionaire from the enclaves of New York who claims that he is for the down and out Joe or the angered coal miner or the forgotten tool and die maker.

A man who wears a strange hairdo, an orange tan and talks with his hands and mouths ugly smears against anyone that he deems a lesser mortal than he.

A man who spouts profanity at a moment’s notice and is not above inciting violence but only to disavow it, if the preordained violence materializes.

To many frustrated Americans, he is a king! He speaks their language of despair and he projects “King Saul” strength to a country that believes that maybe its best days are behind it.

This current crop of Americans, a nation unlike those around them, who used to fervidly profess a passion for all things of God and who would engage in national days of prayer and would mock and scold anyone who would so much as open a store on a Sunday are now pleading for a king to lead them to a better and stronger America.

These people are willing to overlook the glaring wars and moral failures of their King, Donald Trump, so long as he delivers on his punch lines and if he does, they have no need for the slow moving God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

շBecause now, they can feel and see King Trump and they can get satisfaction that their nation will soon be all powerful again and able to take on any pretenders (Russians or Chinese or ISIS) to their contrived throne.

King Trump gives them political and religious cover when he dutifully mouths certain “Christian phrases and words” and entwines those words in a nationalistic cloth that causes his legion of followers to believe him no matter what he says.

They are willing to forsake their knowledge and history of God in exchange for a true champion of the people who will smite the Goliaths of job grabbing China and evil Muslims hiding under every mosque and marauding Mexicans coming into the country at an alarming rate to murder, steal and rape.

King Trump knows how to rake the racist coals and stir up the thick muck that is so close to the surface of so many disgruntled Americans who see themselves as grasshoppers before giants...but King Trump has promised to slay those giants and that is all they want and need. King Trump repeatedly says, “Just believe me!”

Has God allowed a King Trump to spank and discipline America and to show the paucity of faith in God in exchange for a true champion of the oppressed and those who yearn for freedom. They even put such a catchy phrase to that effect on the Statue of Liberty.

Ohio House Democratic legislators last week voted against the passage of Senate Bill (SB) 152, saying legislation to ban local hiring standards and restrict project labor agreements (PLAs) for public works projects will handcuff the decision-making authority of local communities and disproportionately harm African-American workers in the state.

“We want people to have opportunity in Ohio, not be locked out of projects. A vote to restrict local hiring is a vote for Kentucky, Indiana and everybody else,” said Rep. Stephanie Howse (D-Cleveland).

“Ohioans deserve a fair shot at good-paying local jobs that can provide economic stability for them and their families,” said Rep. Emilia Sykes (D-Akron). “Politicians in Columbus should not be picking winners and losers when it comes to our local infrastructure upgrades. Local communities like Akron deserve the freedom to make decisions that will put people back to work and stabilize our local economy.”

Just last month, Ohio transportation officials submitted a waiver asking the federal government to allow the state to pursue local hiring benchmarks for highway construction projects in hopes that it will result in more contracts being awarded to minority-owned companies. Specifically, the state is seeking permission to use criteria similar to what was followed for awarding work for the Opportunity Corridor Project in Cleveland, which maintained a goal of 20 percent participation in the work by minority businesses and followed Cleveland hiring rules that require 20 percent of the work be done by city residents.

“PLAs can include local hiring benchmarks that help strengthen the local economy by providing opportunities to workers from the community,” said House Minority Leader Fred Strahorn (D-Dayton). “Undercutting existing laws will negatively affect major construction projects in the future by sewing confusion and destabilizing project bids, budgets and timelines.”

said Rep. Stephanie Howse (D-Cleveland). “This legislation does not lend itself to fixing the problem – it is only going to exacerbate the economic barriers for minority workers in our state.”

“It’s fascinating to me that those who so rarely, if ever, actually experience concepts like discrimination, leveling the playing field or decisions based on zip codes, use those concepts to justify legislation that absolutely furthers institutionalized discrimination,” said Rep. Janine Boyd (D-Cleveland Heights). “I just want my friends on the other side of the aisle to be honest with us, with themselves and with voters. Every time they allocate local government funding dollars to townships and small villages only, and not to any other community, they legalize disparity based on zip codes and they do not level the playing field; every time they refuse to fund public transportation, they legalize disparity based on zip codes and they do not level the playing field. Let’s just be real.”

“The unemployment rate for minorities in our urban cities is currently double digits, if the governor signs this bill into law, it will definitely increase the unemployment rate in Ohio,” said Rep. Michael Ashford (D-Toledo). “We should be doing everything we can to make sure good-paying jobs stay in Ohio instead of passing special interest legislation that gives out-of-state, fly-by-night contractors an advantage.”

The lawmakers also objected to provisions of SB 152 that restrict communities’ ability to use project labor agreements on public construction projects.

“Project labor agreements are a proven tool to ensure fair wages and quality work help complete projects on time and under budget. In addition, PLAs can include local hiring benchmarks that help strengthen the local economy by providing opportunities to workers from the community,” said House Minority Leader Fred Strahorn (D-Dayton). “Undercutting existing laws will negatively affect major construction projects in the future by sewing confusion and destabilizing project bids, budgets and timelines.”

In 2002, the Ohio Supreme Court struck down state legislation that prohibited a public entity from requiring project labor agreements for local projects. Republicans are doubling-down on the attempt to restrict PLAs with an amendment added at the last minute to SB 152 Tuesday morning that will prohibit project labor agreements from being required on any public works projects receiving state funds.

“For over 60 years, project labor agreements have helped communities and workers come together to complete major public works on time and on budget,” said Strahorn. “Private contractors use project labor agreements because they know the financial benefits of having a quality product completed under-budget and on time. For Republicans that say we should run government like a business, restricting PLAs does the exact opposite.”

The Senate rejected House changes to SB 152 this week, sending the bill to conference committee before a final stop at Gov. Kasich’s desk for his signature.
Voter Engagement Discussion Focuses on Education and Importance of Voting

By Tricia Hall
Sojourner’s Truth Reporter

Dozens gathered to hear guest speaker Derrick Clay, president and CEO of Visions Group, LLC, present information and lead a discussion on integrating community empowerment on Thursday, April 28, 2016 at the African America Legacy Project headquarters on Collingwood Blvd.

Clay opened his presentation by outlining milestones achieved by Republican and Democratic Party presidents.

“President Nixon influenced foreign affairs and established the war on drugs. Reagan’s economic development was established through tax cuts, and the voter rights act was signed in 1965,” said Clay. “Bush senior signed the Americans with Disabilities act, and increased taxes after he promised he won’t. Bush junior created the Patriot Act, Homeland Security, and suffered failed FEMA rescue attempts. Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act, which was the greatest piece of legislation. Carter created the federal energy department, transportation regulations for passengers. During Clinton’s presidency, 22 million jobs were created, welfare reform occurred and the most alarming rate of African Americans were locked up. Obama established Affordable Care Act, which provides medical coverage for millions of Americans and improved Cuban relations.”

Clay encouraged audience participation and accepted audience questions about various topics including: why African Americans should care about the upcoming presidential election, and best practices for voter engagement. “President Obama’s campaign provides an example of a well-organized voter campaign. He cleaned up voter registration lists, utilized technology, and looked at transportation concerns,” explained Clay.

Clay is a Toledo native and Macomber-Whitney alumnus. He has received recognition by Ebony Magazine as a leader under the age of 30, Business First Magazine as top business leader under 40, and Smart Business Magazine as one of its Smart Leaders. The group invited Clay to assist in unveiling this organization by sharing his insight into vital issues that are at stake in the Toledo community during the upcoming election cycle.

Visions of Integrating Community Empowerment Socially, also known as Voices, is a group of Toledo young African-American professionals dedicated to giving “voice” to a range of community issues. Their mission is about connecting agents for social change through active engagement to empower and uplift our neighborhoods and community.

“Today’s discussion is about voting. It’s important to educate voters, not just about local issues but all issues. Periodically we will have different events that impact our community,” explained Minister Rashieda Timpson, Voices member who focuses on special interest in community empowerment and health wellness.
Students Earn Youth Jefferson Award – Students In Action

Special to The Truth

St. John’s Jesuit High School (SJJ) seniors Ivan Dye of Toledo and Aaron Thompson of Holland are the honored recipients of the Youth Jefferson Award – Students In Action. These two young men who are student leaders have helped shaped the volunteerism culture on their campus and represent the SJJ motto of being men for others.

Students In Action is a student-led program whose sole purpose is the teaching of high school youth to become effective, service-driven leaders.

Leadership Toledo approached the St. John’s Jesuit community to ask that we aid in the launching of the Students in Action program. The Christian Service Core Team has done this by selecting two of St. John’s Jesuit own to be recipients of a Jefferson award. The selection criteria were based solely on the service a student completes above and beyond what is required at St. John’s Jesuit.

Ivan Dye co-founded Books 4 Buddies in 2012. At Fassett Middle School’s graduation ceremony in east Toledo, Dye surprised more than 200 students, parents, teachers and community leaders when he greeted everyone in Chinese. Forty Chinese middle school students were participating in a three-week educational program. Dye read to children there and helped distribute free books.

At Birmingham Terrace, Books/Buddies/Blankets, he was joined by eight international students from Africa, Asia, Europe and South America. Dye designed a bed saddle for kids who have no place to store books at home.

He was selected as Salutatorian for the Class of 2016 and was the February Maumee Rotary Student of the Month. He has volunteered through the SJJ Daytime Christian Service Program at the Spring Meadows Extended Care Center and at the Goerlich Center working with dementia patients. He did service in Appalachia during spring break.

At Third Baptist Church he is captain of the Junior Usher Board. Dye has been consistently on the honor roll and is a member of the National Honor Society. He is in the Ambassador Society, a student leadership group that works at school events. He was in the Marching, Concert, Pep and Jazz Bands during his early years at SJJ.

He has been involved in cross country all four years and was named to the All Academic Team. He has been on the Track and Field Team for four years. Junior year he was First Team, All TRAC; First Team, All District and First Team, All Region. He was also Track & Field All Academic. Ways Students Can Use Summer Vacation to Prepare for the Future

Is your family thinking about the skills and experience your child needs for college and future success? The majority of college admission officers recommend that students start preparing before or by ninth grade. Yet, more than half of middle level students haven’t started prepping for college, according to statistics from the National Honor Society (NHS) and National Junior Honor Society (NJHS).

Experts say that summer is the perfect time for children to get ahead in building skills and experience for the journey to and through college and lifelong success.

“It’s never too early to start building your future,” says Jonathan Mathis, director of the National Honor Societies. “The down time during the long vacation can be an ideal opportunity to make progress working toward this goal.”

As part of “Honor Your Future Now,” an NHS and NJHS campaign to encourage students to prepare now for college and success beyond, the National Honor Societies are offering the following advice to families with college-bound students:

• Don’t Wait: No matter what grade your student is entering in the fall, encourage extracurricular and co-curricular opportunities that foster well-roundedness.
• Be a Leader: Encourage participation in leadership programs to learn important skills like resourcefulness, problem-solving and cooperation. Becoming a strong leader early can help your student throughout college and his or her career.
• Build Character: Teach your student about the importance of demonstrating high standards of honesty, integrity and showing respect toward others. Building strong character can serve as the foundation for future success.
• Give Back: Suggest joining volunteer projects that your student is passionate about, and emphasize the importance of being active in and giving back to your community.
• Find a Voice: It’s important for your student to understand his or her role and rights as a citizen. Take advantage of this election year to talk with your child about the political process and why it’s critical to get involved.
• Be There For Your Child: Getting to and through college can be daunting for students, but teaching the values of scholarship, service, leadership, character and citizenship can help children prepare for college and beyond. Involved parents can make a lasting positive impact.
• Understand Finances: College costs can be overwhelming. It’s never too early to start planning. Spend time with your child this summer researching what need-based and merit-based financial aid options are available. Talk to your child about putting some of the money earned through jobs or received as gifts into a savings account, such as the 529 plan.

More tips and resources for parents and students can be found at HonorYourFutureNow.org.

Between the sun and fun of summer, help your child spend time now preparing for college, career and a lifetime of success. It’s never too early to begin thinking about a successful future.

Three Toledo Early College High School Students Advance to National Level in History Day Contest

Special to The Truth

Toledo Early College sophomores Zion Hofmann, Aylin Dominguez and Valentin Ornelas will travel to College Park, MD on June 12, 2016 to compete at the national level of the National History Day (NHD) contest. The three students took top honors in their categories at the state NHD contest that was held at Ohio Wesleyan University on April 30, 2016.

Sophomore Reem Abdel-Khaleq was also recognized as a national alternate. The students were accompanied by their teachers, Mona Al-Hayani and Randy Nissen.

Every freshman and sophomore at Early College is required to create an NHD project; entering the contest is optional. Project categories include exhibits, websites, papers, documentaries and performances. Seventy-five students represented the school at the regional contest at BGSU in April where 24 qualified for the state contest.

Zion Hofmann’s project was a website entitled In For the Long Haul: The encounter between black and white baseball and the exchange of ideas that led to one interracial baseball league. Aylin Dominguez and Valentin Ornelas worked together on a group documentary titled Woodstock: Three Days of Peace, Love and Music. Reem Abdel Khaleq created a website titled Dawn of the Space Age: The Impact of Sputnik on educational, technological and scientific exchanges.

“NHD is a year-long interdisciplinary project that involves extensive research, writing and advanced computer skills. It is the best thing we do. Kids learn to think like historians”, said Randy Nissen, social studies teacher. “Making it to nationals is not only a breathtaking accomplishment but also a wonderful privilege to meet new people and see other projects done by other competitors”, said Dominguez, “I can’t wait to give it all I’ve got with my partner, and hope for the best while wishing luck to other competitors.”

Reducing the chances of losing our children also requires that we aggressively monitor them as Moses’ sister did for him. We cannot allow children to spend unlimited time on the streets and without knowing where they are, who their friends might be and what type of peer influence they are receiving.

The final lesson is this. Prayer is mandatory. Prayer also works.

As a child, I have the vivid memory of my late mother who would get down on her knees in prayer every single night. I am thankful, that when I was too foolish, “grown,” or educated to act right, that my “mama” – went to the Lord on my behalf.

I know now, that I did not survive on my own, but in the words of the old hymn:

Somebody Prayed for me.
Had me on THEIR mind.
And TOOK THE TIME to pray for me.

Mothers Day should enable us to search for grateful memories. I am thankful for black mothers everywhere -young and old, single mothers, homeless mothers, grandmothers, godmothers, and surrogate or non-biological mothers –who shielded, sacrificed, watched and prayed that black children might live.

- Provided 960,524 reference transactions to customers (reference questions answered, databases and reference materials accessed or explained)
- Provided programs and other services to 210,000 people

“‘We are very proud of the ROI Study, as it demonstrates that we are being fiscally responsible and putting taxpayer dollars to good use,” said Clyde Scoles, director.

TLCPL is continually transforming to meet the needs of the communities that it serves – whether it be to provide job search assistance, computer skills training, homework help for students, or entertainment through books and movies, “we are always looking for new ways to engage others and encourage them to visit our Library,” Scoles said.

ion show and announcement of the mother of the year. “Today we will honor four ladies for their outstanding academic excellence, and of course the mother of the year. I urge everyone to come back next year and support academic excellence,” explained Siner.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority Inc, Toledo Alumnae chapter, awarded three scholarships in the amount of $1,500 each. Jada M. Boles, graduating senior of Toledo School of the Arts maintains a 3.7 GPA, plans to attend Point Park University of Marymount Manhattan and pursue a dance major and minor in business. Ryonna Birchfield, graduating senior of Notre Dame Academy, maintains a 3.8 GPA, plans to attend Kent State University and major in business and entrepreneurship. Daijah Blackburn, graduating senior of Rogers High School maintains a 3.8 GPA and plans to attend Spelman College while majoring in economics and communications.

Taylor E.B. Coleman, graduating senior of Central Catholic High School, plans to attend Kent State University and pursue a degree in journalism. She earned the Bobbie Burks Gilmore Book Scholarship for $500.

The 2016 mother of the year was State Senator Edna Brown, who was surrounded by family and friends during the reading of her bio. Traditionally the announcement is a surprise for one mother in the audience. “It feels extra special, particularly since I didn’t know anything about it. My brother told me a few weeks ago that he had purchased tickets for the breakfast, which I have attended on several occasions. I had no idea that I was selected, biggest surprise ever in my life,” explained Brown.

Brown was born and raised in Toledo, graduated from Whitney High School and received a bachelor’s degree from Mary Manse College. Brown worked for the City of Toledo Natural Resources Department for 32 years, served as Toledo City Council member for six years, Ohio House of Representatives member for eight years, and was sworn into office on January 3, 2011 as the first African-American to represent the city of Toledo in the State Senate. She is a long-time member of Braden United Methodist Church, was married to the late Willie Brown for 40 years, has three children, six grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

“The expression on my mom’s face was priceless, totally priceless. We kept this secret, and it wasn’t easy. She’s a wonderful mother, grandmother, and mentor. She instills education into her family and we have taken it to heart,” said Kathy Dadzie, Brown’s daughter.

The history of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority Inc. dates back to 1913 when 22 women on the campus of Howard University chartered the sorority. Currently over 250,000 women are members. Toledo Alumnae chapter was established in 1973.

The 2016-2017 officers: Angela Siner, president; Jacquelyn Jones, PhD, first vice president; Stacy Jackson-Jones, second vice president; Meiuttenun Brown, PhD, corresponding secretary; Jazneika Spinks, recording secretary; Tonia Pace, PhD, treasurer; Tiffany Hairston, PhD, financial secretary; and Cheryce Burton, assistant financial secretary.

Breakfast committee chairs: Wanda Terrell-Galloway, chairperson; Kaylene Miller, souvenir program; Sandy Strong, door prizes; Trevor Black, decorations; Bessie Mack, publicity; Bonita Johnson, vendors; Cheryce Burton, financial coordinator; ticket committee Sue Fletcher, Billie Lottery, and Sandy Strong; mother of the year committee Billie Lottery, Bessie Mack, and Theresa Wilkins; scholarship committee Cheryce Burton, Stacey Jackson-Jones, and Shannon Tisdale.
Things can change in an instant.
It only takes a minute to catch a mistake, a blink for disaster to occur, a heartbeat to alter history. When it’s over, you wonder how things happened so fast: a second, two shakes of a lamb’s tail or, as in the new book by Howard Means, just 67 Shots.

May 4, 1970, was a deadly day in South Vietnam: 24 American soldiers died there in the jungle heat; just average boys, “mostly white, mostly single, mostly volunteers.” Mostly under age 20.
It was hot in America, too, that weekend prior: the Lakers played the Knicks for the championship; Muhammad Ali had just been stripped of his boxing title; the Beatles were letting it be; ROTC centers across the nation were under attack; and Richard Nixon had just dropped a verbal bombshell in a “Cambodia speech.” Residents of Kent, Ohio, who hated the local college population’s burgeoning political activism, complained about out-of-towners who seemed to be goading the students.

Students at Kent State University were likewise restless; frisky at the end of a long cold winter, they flocked to downtown bars to let off steam, and various protest organizations had rallied that weekend.
Rumors flew like Frisbees, claiming that the campus’ ROTC building would be torched but police and officials didn’t appear worried, and didn’t seem surprised when it did.

Shortly afterward, students were put under lock-down, and the National Guard took over campus.
There were protests that Saturday night; hundreds of students were tear-gassed, but few thought that Guardsmen actually had live ammunition. Helicopters scanned campus and looked for curfew violators. It was quieter on Sunday, a bit more relaxed, though there were isolated incidences of violence and, despite that there was a ban, an anti-Guard protest rally was scheduled for Monday, May 4 at noon.
At 9:00 a.m. Monday, a meeting was held by officials to discuss looming problems. Early classes were warned to stay away from trouble.
Tear-gas was in the air just before lunch.
At 11:58, some Guardsmen were ordered to form a line.
By 12:24, the first of four students lay dead…
It’s hard not to think of a certain iconic picture when you’re reading 67 Shots. It’s hard not to hear Neil Young in your head, and it’s definitely hard not to wince.
Even though we know what happens, there’s a sense of dread in the scenes that author Howard Means recreates, which escalate to the breathtaking culmination of this book. That arrives, surprisingly, long before you even get halfway through the pages; Means then shows how everything changed in just thirteen seconds, how Kent State “unmoored” a nation and a president, and what ramifications came in the aftermath – legally, personally (to those who were there), and historically.

While, of course, anyone can read this book, I think it’ll have more meaning to Boomers who remember the before and after of Kent State. 67 Shots is a sharp account that fills in the blanks and takes you back. For that, you’ll want it in a heartbeat.
