OPEN LETTER TO THE COMMUNITY (September 6, 2017)

DAVID FLEETWOOD, BUSINESS MANAGER – LABORERS LOCAL 500

SPEAK FOR YOURSELF!!!

As the leader of a labor organization, I am privileged to be invited to many meetings whereby other business professionals and elected officials are making major decisions regarding our daily quality of life. More than a few times, those in attendance and making decisions aren’t reflective of the communities we live, work and play. If we aren’t at the table representing our own thoughts and desires, then who are the people speaking for us, our neighborhoods, and the businesses we own and operate? Are these people speaking for our communities or only for their own? YOU HAVE A CHOICE TO HAVE A VOICE AT THESE TABLES.

According to PEW Research, in the 2016 Presidential Election, White voter turnout increased, Black voter turnout decreased, and Latino voter turnout held steady from 2012. It is certainly your right to vote or not vote, but we must keep in mind that by not voting, someone else is voting and making decisions for us; these are the people in the room speaking for us, and sometimes against us. This is evident based on the results of the 2016 Presidential Election and is certain to happen in our local election on Tuesday, September 12, 2017, unless we make our voices heard and get out and vote.

If we feel that we often do not have a voice, it’s because often, WE DO NOT! Could it be because a great majority of us don’t vote? Short answer, YES. A small minority of “representatives” make the decisions for the “majority” of the citizens. There are politicians attempting to silence you by purging you from voter rolls because you are not utilizing your right to vote. This is serious people! This is just the beginning of elected officials taking away your rights. We must get off the sidelines and engage in the selection process of our leaders. You may not be physically at every table, but you have a chance to elect those that will best speak for you. Through your vote, you speak for yourself!

Will the politicians we elect be all that we want them to be all of the time? Absolutely not, but we must learn how to hold them accountable while they’re in office by making sure they know that we voted for them, and we’ll organize our political strengths and vote against them if they fail to represent us. There are many politicians that genuinely care about YOU and genuinely want to represent YOU. However, many politicians no longer solicit your vote because your voting history tells them not to bother. Your inactivity in voting tells them that you are no threat to them. Let’s change that immediately by voting today at the Early Vote Center or go to your designated polling location on Tuesday, September 12. If you don’t vote in September, your candidate may not make it to the ballot in November.

Please…..Take this time and SPEAK FOR YOURSELF!

Central Catholic High School Imposes Dreadful Ban on Black Hairstyles

By Megan Davis
The Truth Contributor

Central Catholic High School, a private school, has a rule in its student handbook with regard to unacceptable hairstyles. While some styles on the list may pertain to all students, two styles in particular are specific to African Americans. This hairstyle rule has landed one student in detention.

Malachi Wattley, a freshman at the school, applied for and was accepted into the school while wearing his hair in locs, a hairstyle which he has had since the age of two. His mother, Maylin Wattley, told the local news that her son was raised in the U.S. Virgin Islands, and that he is Rastafarian, a religious and spiritual belief. Ms. Wattley stated that prior to enrolling her son, whose sister is already a student, the school assured her that his hair would not be a problem.

During the last school week, an announcement was made over the PA system, that dreadlocks are not an acceptable hairstyle. When Wattley returned to school following this announcement with his dreadlocks, he was disciplined and placed in detention.

The handbook reads:
For gentlemen students: Fad hairstyles (spikes, mohawks, dreadlocks, twistys, ponytails, carvings or man-buns) are not accepted. The assistant principal of campus ministry and discipline is the final judge of what is acceptable.

For ladies: All hair must be a natural color, neat, clean and well groomed (no dreadlocks).

“This rule does not reflect the love of Christ towards all people. Nor does it reflect the heart of Pope Francis,” said Marriane Barrera of Grand Rapids, MN a national supporter of the Wattley family.

Following the disciplinary action, Ms. Wattley and local parent advocate, Twila Page, met with the superintendent of the Catholic Schools, Vincent DePaul Schmidt, PhD. Schmidt, who is new to the schools as of August 1, 2017, came to Toledo after serving in Charleston, West Virginia and St. Louis (near Ferguson), Missouri. The previous cities in which he has served have been under scrutiny for their roles in keeping racism alive in America.

In November of 2016, then mayor of Charleston, WV, Beverly Whaling, resigned from office following backlash she received after posting a comment on a racist rant against former First Lady Michelle Obama, on Facebook. The racially charged comment was originally posted by Clay County Development Corp. director Pamela Ramsey Taylor who made the post following Donald Trump’s election as president.

Her post said: “It will be refreshing to have a classy, beautiful, dignified First Lady in the White House. I’m tired of seeing a Ape in heels.” The former mayor replied “Just made my day Pam.” West Virginia itself is a state made up of only four percent African Americans.

Schmidt had been hired as the Charleston school superintendent after working several years in St. Louis, Missouri, which is near Ferguson, the location where Mike Brown was gunned down by police officers, sparking a national outcry for justice and reform in racism. His position on the current handbook’s rule on dreadlocks and twistys is that he has no intention of changing or removing the current stipulation. He suggested that perhaps something could be done for the next school year. Page described Schmidt as condescending, bellicose and disrespectful during the meeting.

Tamara Eldridge of Myrtle Beach wrote “I am a former Toledo resident and I am concerned about how students of color, especially girls, are being victimized by such policies and made to feel shame about their natural beauty. This is an example of institutionalized racism. It must be stopped.”

When the news of this hairstyle ban hit social media, several people, including many alumni, made phone calls, sent emails and wrote comments on the school’s Facebook page. News of this ban has reached the US Virgin Islands, where the Wattley family is originally from and is being reported on media outlets, including catholicculture.org.

A new grassroots organization, the Ohio Natural Hair Coalition, started a petition, addressing the local diocese and school administrators to not only remove the rule from their handbook, but to also take the time to learn about hairstyles that are specific to African Americans. Their rules are based on bias, ignorance and fear of what they don’t know or rather an understanding of what they think they know.

Their generalization of styles that are a fad, not well groomed, unclean and unprofessional include natural hairstyles such as dreadlocks and twists, both common styles worn by both males and females of African descent. The petition, in its updates, highlights the offense of the term “twistys” a term coined by whites who don’t know what to call black hairstyles.

A portion of the petition states “This school, like others as well as employers around the US, should be educated on what natural hair is and what styles are worn by those who have natural hair, the hair that African Americans are born with. Being told that their twists or locs are unacceptable is an infringement on their rights to be who they organically are, melanated, with curly, coily and fluffy. Hair that naturally grows upward, has long been banned in school and employee policies.

Ohio Department of Insurance Director Jillian Froment last week joined CareSource to announce Paulding County will now have health insurance coverage on the federal exchange in 2018. Following announcements made earlier this summer by other carriers, Ohioans in 20 Ohio counties faced the potential of not having access to health insurance. On July 31, the department joined five insurers, including CareSource, to announce coverage options in the other 19 counties.

“Working through this challenge has been a priority for the department and our staff in recent weeks and I’m proud of the collaborative approach insurers have been willing to take so that we could come together and solve this problem,” Froment said. “There is a lot of uncertainty facing consumers when it comes to health insurance and these announcements will provide important relief.”

In the coming weeks the department will work with insurers to finalize the products and rates that will be available on the exchange in 2018. The department’s review of those filings will be completed by early September and insurers must sign contracts with the federal government by late September to sell coverage on the federal exchange.

Including Paulding County, the 20 counties where coverage has been restored are: Coshocton, Crawford, Guernsey, Hancock, Harrison, Hocking, Holmes, Jackson, Knox, Lawrence, Logan, Morgan, Muskingum, Noble, Paulding, Perry, Van Wert, Vinton, Williams and Wyandot. More than 11,000 Ohioans purchase coverage through the health care exchange in those counties.

“Making sure coverage is available has been our goal through this process, but this is a temporary solution and one that only applies to... continued on page 6

Joseph J. Howe: Candidate for Housing Court
Judge Offers Win/Win Idea for Homeowners and Labor Unions

By Fletcher Word
Sojourner’s Truth Editor

After Joe Howe earned his undergraduate degree in liberal studies from Bowling Green State University, the Dean’s List student discovered that his potential in the jobs market was limited. Extremely limited.

A liberal studies degree only gained him a job as a repo man for a rent-to-own appliance/furniture store. In the year of work that followed, he arrived at two realizations. One, he was utterly disgusted at having to prey on the misfortunes of others; such a calling was “a travesty,” he says. And, two, he needed to return to school to enhance his career opportunities.

Off to law school the Napoleon native went, graduating from the University of Toledo, College of Law; earning a spot on Law Review and entering a profession in which he could become extensively involved in consumer protection matters – first in private practice, then for the past 11 years, in the City of Toledo Prosecutor’s Office working in the Housing Court. “The housing court was a natural fit for me with my civil background,” says Howe of the transition into his prosecutor’s duties. “My role is, in large part, a mediator trying to get [visitors to the housing court] in compliance with the law.”

As a prosecutor he views himself as being in a position to “promote the interest of our neighborhoods,” while trying to ensure that parties are in compliance with laws that protect consumers, neighborhoods and the city in general.

Howe is the endorsed candidate for the Lucas County Democratic Party to succeed Judge C. Allen McConnell who is age-barred from seeking another term on the bench. As judge, Howe feels he would be in a position to continue the work he has undertaken since his graduation 20 years ago from law school. “As a judge, I would look for a fair and equal application of the law; those who are damaging our neighborhoods need to be punished.” And, as a judge, Howe would propose some ideas that he believes will make life better for a host of Toledoans and, thus far, a number of labor unions who have endorsed him tend to agree. More on that later.

Howe explains that his reliance on the rule of law determined how he would approach the now-famous Thomas Jackson matter when it surfaced. Jackson, an urban farmer, was ultimately fined $3,000 for his use of wood chip composts on his property that neighbors said attracted rodents. “It’s about a fair and equal application of the law,” says Howe. “In our first meeting I told him ‘I understand what you are trying to do, but as it stands now, there are no urban agriculture laws that allow the large scale composting that you are doing now.’”

The Jackson matter dragged on for over a year and the tragedy of the situation, says Howe, is that the City of Toledo is without legislation that would help citizens in such instances. “The City of Toledo is behind the curve,” he says. “There is no urban farming legislation such as other cities have, that would provide guidance to the farmers and would provide reassurance to the neighbors.”

As for Howe’s ideas, there are several he mentioned in a chat with The Truth and one is particularly striking. Noting all the people who come into the housing court needing help because they have been cited for deficiencies by inspectors but do not have the wherewithal or funds to make the necessary repairs, Howe has proposed to a variety of building trades labor unions that they form a partnership with the court and provide apprentices to work voluntarily on such dwellings. The residents need the help, the apprentices need the work.

“All the unions have agreed that it’s a wonderful idea,” he says, and have agreed to the proposal and endorsed his candidacy. It is a win/win idea for homeowners and the building trades unions, he says, and will serve the additional goal of “getting rid of illegal contractors” — those scofflaws who prey on vulnerable homeowners and provide shoddy service.

To date, Howe has received endorsements from: Northwest Building and Construction Trades Council, Roofers Local 134, Sheet Metal Workers International Association Local 33, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 8, Carpenters Local 351, Cement Masons and Plasterers Local 886, Iron Workers Local 55, Plumbers, Steamfitters and Service Mechanics Local 50, Laborers Local 500, AFL-CIO, United Food and Commercial Workers Local 75 and International Association of Heat and Frost Insulators and Asbestos Workers Local 45.

“I care deeply for the city of Toledo,” says the Democratic candidate. “I have a vested interest in helping Toledo be the best that it can be. I have good ideas about how to do that with the insight and experience that no one else has.”
Statement Regarding President of the United States Lifting Ban on Military Equipment For Police

I am a strong supporter of providing our public safety employees with all essential equipment to insure they can do their job and provide for their safety. However, I was alarmed by last week’s news that the President of the United States has lifted the ban on providing certain surplus military equipment to police departments. In particular, The Toledo Blade printed a front page story: Military equipment ban for police lifted: Restrictions went too far, Sessions says that in part stated:

Mr. Obama issued an executive order in 2015 that severely limited the program.

His order prohibited the federal government from providing grenade launchers, bayonets, tracked armored vehicles, weaponized aircraft and vehicles, and firearms and ammunition of .50-caliber or greater to police.

As of December, the agency overseeing the program recalled at least 100 grenade launchers, more than 1,600 bayonets, and 126 tracked vehicles — that run on continuous, tank-like tracks instead of wheels — that were provided through the program.

I have communicated my concerns to Chief of Police Kral about the City of Toledo acquiring equipment which by design is not appropriate for use in the civilian policing environment. I will likewise communicate the same to the City Administration and I will strongly oppose any effort to acquire this level of weaponry for use by the City of Toledo.

Sincerely,
Larry J. Sykes

2018. Beyond that, insurers are still looking for predictability in the health insurance market,” Froment added. “Now is the time for Congress to work on reforms that will strengthen our health insurance markets in ways that improve access and affordability.”

When Afro hair is groomed, it is most often fashioned into braids, twists and locs; to ban this from any institution is a subtle effort to remind African Americans that they are not welcome or accepted as they are, lest they change or alter themselves in a way that is more comfortable for others. Even in that, the African American will always be considered threatening, hard, angry, aggressive, unintelligent, special needs or unacceptable. “The petition entitled “Unlock Biases Toward African Americans With With Natural Hair and Locs in School” has reached over 600 signatures since it was created on August 31.

This is the second time Central Catholic has been under public scrutiny for this type of rule. In 2011 they were challenged by the community when a senior, who was enrolling for classes, was told that her dreadlocks were unacceptable and she was to cut them off prior to returning. It was assumed that the school, after receiving many letters and phone calls, eliminated the rule in its online handbook to appease those who called in against it. But in a shocking revelation last week, that student came forward and admitted that she was only permitted to complete her high school education and graduate without incident if she agreed not to go to the news or encourage community members to protest in front of the school. It was also revealed that while the online handbook was altered to remove the rule on dreadlocks, the in-print handbook remained the same throughout the years.

In spite of all the attention this story has received, the school has refused to budge on its position citing that the students should simply comply. In a letter sent to Ms. Wattley, Central Catholic High School’s, Head of School, Therese B. Hernandez stated: “Malachi’s current hair length and color do not comply with the handbook and will need to be adjusted before he is allowed to return to school on Tuesday September 5, 2017. Failure to do so will result in Malachi not being permitted to attend classes. Central Catholic High School is rooted in the mission of the Catholic Church and the message of Jesus Christ. All parents and students are expected to respect and support our philosophy of education, policies and procedures...”

Ms. Wattley shared this letter on her social media page along with videos of her son talking about his connection to his hair and culture. While there are many who are supporting the family in their efforts to resolve this issue with the school, there are others who do not support them, stating that they should follow the rules or leave. There are also several African-American men who, while they appreciate the cultural and spiritual significance of dreadlocks, they prefer that their sons select shorter hairstyles.

Some of these men, who are often faced with racial profiling and assumptions from law enforcement have an authentic fear of their sons being profiled because of their hairstyles, so it is less stressful to have their sons clean cut and clean shaven. One father even stated that just as women enjoy getting their hair done, there is something about stepping down from a barber chair with a fresh cut that makes them feel good about themselves.

Because the school’s handbook also states that the final judgment is up to the school’s assistant principal, it leaves the rules in limbo as some... continued on page 11

Facts and Myths About Germs at School

Everybody seems to have an opinion about germs -- what causes them, where they’re located, how to avoid them -- especially when it comes to children.

Experts say that American children miss 22 million days of school annually due to colds, flu and other infections.

“Avoiding germs at schools isn’t as simple as just washing your hands in the bathroom or sneezing into your sleeve,” says Charles Gerba, Ph.D., professor of microbiology and environmental sciences at the University of Arizona. “Germs are on everything kids touch in the classroom, as well as around the hallways, cafeteria and playground.”

With this in mind, it is important to separate facts from myths about germs in schools.

• Fact: Desks Are Among the Most Germ-Prone Items. It’s true! Students spend most of the day at their desks -- sneezes, coughs and all -- and, in some schools, they often switch classrooms and share desks with others. At the end of the day, students bring home that cocktail of germs to their families.

• Myth: Any Hand Sanitizer Will Do. According to research from the University of Colorado at Boulder, people carry an average of 3,200 bacteria on their hands. While most hand sanitizers are 99.9 percent effective at killing germs, some only last for a few minutes or until the application dries on the skin. Therefore, parents should consider applying hand sanitizers for their children that last throughout the day, such as Zoono’s GermyFree24, which is proven to last for 24 hours on skin and is available as both a foam and a spray.

• Fact: Germs Can Affect Kids Outside the Classroom. Germs in schools aren’t just isolated to classrooms. They are everywhere, including cafeteria trays, playground jungle gyms and sports equipment. In fact, the Clinical Journal of Sports Medicine found 63 percent of gym equipment is contaminated with rhinovirus, which causes the common cold. Reminding children to wash their hands before and after using these items (and wiping them down) will go a long way toward preventing sickness.

• Myth: Sticking Things in Your Mouth is Special to The Truth rules may be enforced while others are more relaxed. Since Ms. Wattley went to the school to address his hair before enrolling her son and paying his tuition, she has been blindsided with the sudden change of heart and is left in a panic, not knowing what next steps to take regarding her son’s education.

Kimberly Dale of Canton, MI wrote: “I am an African American woman practicing in a healthcare setting with a doctorate degree and I wear my hair in a form of dreadlocks. They are not unclean nor unreasoned. Your school would do well to learn more about a variety of hairstyles rather than assuming that they are “fads”, or not Natural.”

This has long been an issue that many African-American adults have faced in the workplace, but today, it is trickling down to our children, causing them to challenge who they are; to make them believe that their natural beauty isn’t acceptable and they must change something about themselves in order for others to believe they are worth educating and employing. Without a real conversation between the school and parents, it will be nearly impossible to see a change in the rules because in reality, it remains true, that people prefer ignorance over knowledge.

This school demonstrates that it is confident in what it believes instead of what its staff should know about us. Black hair and black skin is still being treated as an exception to the human race. Even former President Obama, who had lighter skin, shorter hair, was clean shaven and highly educated couldn’t escape the preconceptions of white America even after being elected into office. Their fear is being translated into all of the hateful activities taking place from the White House down to the nationalist rallies and given this current climate, “black anything” will be considered an anomaly.
Shibbolethia

The name, as unique, remarkable and lovely as the lady herself, came from the Hebrew Biblical word “SHIBBOLETH” found in the Book of Judges 12:6.

Shibbolethia Bryant (Smith) Lewis was born on August 13, 1920, in Shelbyville, Kentucky, the month and year that women were granted the right to vote.

Her father, Wiley Walter Smith, was a circuit minister for the African Methodist Episcopal (A.M.E.) Church, which required the family to move quite often when she was a young girl. Her mother, Lillian (Hoskins) Smith, was a homemaker who often worked as a domestic to help support her family. The family eventually settled in Hamilton, OH, where Shibbolethia (aka “Shibby”) grew up with her sisters, Margaret and Mollie, and brothers, Emanuel and Paul. Several other children born to the family would die in their early childhoods.

She attended Phillips Chapel (now St. Phillips Temple C.M.E. Church) and the public schools in Hamilton, graduating from Hamilton High School in 1938.

Accepted to Wilberforce University and graduating in 1942, she became the first member of her family to attend college. She majored in home economics as academic options were limited for Black women.

Shibbolethia met her husband, James Clark Lewis, to a United Service Organizations (U.S.O.) event while she was in college. He was in the Army. After her husband was honorably discharged from the Army, the couple lived in Florida and Youngstown before settling in Toledo, OH. Mrs. Lewis held a civil service job in Rossford, OH, while her husband worked as a mail carrier, and later on as a cab driver. Four daughters were born of this union: Brenda, Anita, Cynthia, and Diana.

In the late 1950’s, when the Civil Rights Movement opened doors of opportunity for African Americans, Mrs. Lewis returned to college to obtain teaching credentials, and started her professional teaching career with the Toledo Public Schools (TPS).

She earned her Master’s degree in Education from the University of Toledo in 1962 while working and caring for her family.

A highly respected educator, she taught for many years at the former Roosevelt Elementary, then later at Gunckel and Jones Junior High School in Toledo. Mrs. Lewis is remembered to this day by many of her peers and students as a caring, creative, and skillful teacher.

Widowed in 1965, she became a single parent when her husband died from a heart attack at home. During this difficult time of her life, she had to assume new responsibilities that included learning how to drive for the first time.

A long-time member of the Phillips Temple C.M.E. Church in Toledo, OH, she served as Superintendent of Christian Education, conference delegate, missionary president, Sunday school teacher, and as chairperson for many programs, including Vacation Bible School.

A prolific writer, she wrote articles for The Christian Index (a C.M.E. Church publication), poems, and narrative speeches. She published a collection of intercessory prayers in 1998. She is known for her “ministry” of calling, writing, and sending cards to encourage and to keep in touch with family and friends.

Mrs. Lewis moved to Missouri City, TX, in August, 1997, to live with daughter, Cynthia, and son-in-law, Bernis Hickman, both formerly of Toledo. They welcomed her and served as loving and devoted caregivers for 20 years, providing her with a rich, full life.

On October 13th, 2007, she was able to attend and celebrate her 69th high school reunion in Hamilton with the class of 1938. She was 87 years old at the time.

In November of 2008, at the age of 88, she was so happy and proud to cast her vote for the first African American President of the United States, Barack Hussein Obama; who sent her a proclamation in August 2010 acknowledging her 90th birthday.

Despite many life challenges, she remained a woman of grace, strength, character and perseverance, with a twinkle in her eyes and heart full of love for God and her family.

Mrs. Lewis, 97, passed away at her home on Sunday, August 20, 2017 under the care of Compassus Hospice - Houston.

It was a youthful indiscretion.
   A mistake made due to immaturity or naïveté. Something you did to look bigger, older, or bolder. You knew better but it shouldn’t cost you everything, should it? As in the new book Cuz by Danielle Allen, it shouldn’t cost you your life.

He was her baby cousin.

Although Danielle Allen was only eight years older than Michael, that’s how she always thought of him. He was a mega-watt-smiling, introspective child with an easy-going way, a beloved mischief-maker in a huge family. She remembers when he was born.

She remembers when he died. It began when he was 15.

Allen says that her sprawling family always watched out for one another but Michael’s mother had been raising three kids alone and she ran into some trouble. She learned that her oldest son, Nicholas, was gang-banging when she spotted him on the street. She thought she’d saved Michael from all that but when he was just 14, he was arrested for attempted carjacking.

California’s unique laws put him in juvenile hold, then in adult prison until he was 26 years old. While there, he fell in love with an imprisoned transgender woman. Allen noted the relationship, but she figured that the woman was out of the picture when Michael was released. Being the cousin with the proper resources, Allen began helping Michael put his life together: she paid for an apartment, enrolled him in college, helped him get a job but he couldn’t yet handle any of those things.

He became depressed. He floundered. He moved in with Bree, the transgender woman. Later, Allen learned that Bree came from a world of violence that Michael couldn’t properly deal with, and that was how he died.

So who did it? Allen says that she and Michael grew up with a Do-the-Crime-Do-the-Time attitude, but she only partially lays blame on Michael’s choices. Outside forces, cultures of violence, and the system, she believes, were just as much at fault...

While Cuz is very good and a thought-provoker, it has its problems.

As a professor at Harvard University, author Danielle Allen cannot deny the effect of her job on her writing – which is something she admits. That lends an aura of authority to her story, but it can also feel lecture-like. Allen also includes Michael’s writings within her book; some were lengthy and could have benefitted from editing.

And while there are a lot of grief-raw questions left hanging in-story, readers are also left with a sense of grace and compassion from Cuz. Allen never points fingers, but we’re skillfully led to see what’s what. She’s rightfully angry at what happened to her cousin, but it doesn’t hide her empathy for families who endure hardship to visit their imprisoned loved ones, and it doesn’t lessen her humanity toward the people whose imprisonment doesn’t make sense.

That, mixed with an aching, soaring joy are what you’ll find in Cuz, and it’s going to make you think - hard. Can you afford to miss that? No, make no mistake.

exhibit at the Toledo Botanical Garden now through the end of October.

The Toledo exhibition, following on the heels of a Dallas visit, brings to town artists Aron Kapembeza and Passmore Mupindiko, who will be not only meeting and greeting visitors but will also be creating more pieces during the upcoming weeks.

The exhibit features more than 100 stone sculptures from Zimbabwean artists and all of the pieces are for sale. “Priced to sell,” said Croissette.

In fact, the sale of the pieces finances the tour and provides work and income for the more than 300 artists that Croissette and Zimsculpt work with and promote. “It’s trade not aid,” said Croissette of the way Zimsculpt works. “It’s not a charity, it’s a business.”

Typically, the Zimsculpt exhibition is on the road seven months of the year featuring the stone sculptures of five generations of Zimbabweans, said Croissette, the most famous of whom is Dominic Henhura. Several of Henhura’s pieces are on display at the Toledo Botanical Garden.

Most of the stones used in Zimbabwean sculpture belong to the Serpentine gleological family – a very hard stone – and most of the pieces used are mined by hand.

This culture of stone sculpture is not one that has been ingrained in Zimbabwe artistic life for centuries. The trend is rather recent, in fact, dating back to the 1950s when Frank McEwen, a Scotsman and museum administrator, moved to Zimbabwe – then called Rhodesia – to assume control of the fledgling Rhodes National Gallery, which would be, in keeping of the apartheid laws of the time, strictly limited to the work of white artists, preferably the old masters.

McEwen, seeking to engage black Africans in artistic endeavors eventually set up an unofficial workshop for the black staff of the Gallery. The workshop eventually included a number of prominent artists who worked primarily in stone and began a tradition of sculpting excellence that has continued once the nation of Zimbabwe emerged in the late 1970s.

The Toledo Botanical Garden is open daily from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. and until 9:00 p.m. om Thursdays and Saturdays. There is no admission fee.

WE WILL NEVER FORGET

David Fleetwood, Business Manager
LIUNA Laborers’ Local 500
Vivienne Croisette, a British-born promoter of national and international artists, fell in love with the work of Zimbabwe sculptors 17 years ago and, despite the very troubling times that nation was experiencing, relocated to the southern African country to focus her attention on promoting those artists.

The result was Zimsculpt, an international dealer in Zimbabwean sculpture which exhibits all over the world in a variety of settings. Fortunately for Toledo-area residents, Zimsculpt and its visiting artists will be featured in an
