Leadership Skills and Accomplishments

On Saturday, October 28, former Mayor Carty Finkbeiner brought together ministers, elected official and labor leaders to sing the praises of Mayor Paula Hicks-Hudson in her bid for re-election on November 7. About 70 people joined Finkbeiner and Hicks-Hudson in the lobby of One Government Center.

"We are here on behalf of a lady who is not getting her due for the job she has done for this city," said Finkbeiner leading off the campaign love fest for the "unanimously endorsed candidate" as described later by Lucas County Democratic Party Chairman Josh Hughes.

Next up were Baldemar Velasquez, founder and head of the Farmers Laborers Organizing Committee and Bruce Baumhower, president of the UAW Local 12. Velasquez spoke of the mayor’s efforts to make neighborhoods safer through her efforts to bring LED lighting in the area, and her work with the Unity Coalition which is "working to improve relations with the police."

Baumhower touted her for her accomplishments in business development.

"She’s done a masterful job," he said, pointing to downtown development that she has promoted to bring in the four elements he noted are essential to growth - residential, retail, entertainment and safety. He mentioned projects such as the steam plant, the revitalization of The Docks, the Owens Corning Fiberglas Tower, a new Metropark and the Marina District development. "It’s an unbelievable story on both sides of the river," added Baumhower.

“This year our lake was as ugly as it’s ever been but our water was as clean as its ever been,” he added praising the administration’s handling of the water issue plaguing Lake Erie communities. Baumhower also took the occasion to poke fun at the mayor’s opponent, Lucas County Treasurer Wade Kapszukiewicz for his tendency to label himself an outsider. “He spent 10 years riding the elevator on this side of the building and now he wants to ride the elevator on this side again.” The reference was to Kapszukiewicz ‘years with the City of Toledo on City Council, then his stint with the County and his current ambitions to lead the City.

“He’s not an outsider by any stretch of the imagination,” said Baumhower.

Finkbeiner used a turn at the podium to regale the audience of Hicks-Hudson supporters with press clippings reviewing the progress the City of Toledo has made over the last three years during Hicks-Hudson’s tenure. He cited articles in the Chicago Tribune quotes Toledo-born financial planner Bob Savage.

In addition to Velasquez and Baumhower, a number of other union officials came to the podium to laud Hicks-Hudson’s leadership including: Dennis Duffy; David Fleetwood, Laborers Local 500; Steve Kowalik, AFSCME; Dan Morey, Carpenters’ Union; George Tucker, AFL-CIO.

“She not only cares about the city; she cares about the people in the city,” said Fleetwood.

Other notable supporters at the press conference/rally were: State Senator Edna Brown, Toledo Clerk of Court Vallie Bowman English, Bishop Pat McKinnery, former Lucas County Commissioner Sandy Isenberg, Bishop Robert Culp and a host of local pastors.

"Re-elections are about producing,” said Finkbeiner as he continued his enthusiastic cheerleader role. “She produces. She gets better every week.”

Mayor Paula Hicks-Hudson’s Administration is Building a Solid Non-Stop Future for Toledo

Jobs and Job Training – We Are Coming to You!

A Message from Mayor Paula-Hicks Hudson

We are building for today and tomorrow through results oriented pragmatic innovations that’s delivering results.

• Toledo is working better than ever today!
• Businesses are moving back into downtown, ten thousand jobs created in just 2.5 years!
• Keep us on a Non-Stop path to focus intensely on our neighborhoods for more years!
• We are coming to you with world class job training opportunities for everyone!

Working Sooner Innovating and Adapting Around our Local Student and Adult Talent Populations

In my brief administration thus far we built formidable foundational programs in adult job training, youth talent recognition/retention and institutional partnerships. We started early job certification programs that get people working sooner in good paying jobs. The new programs we support in partnership with our school systems are diversifying our local economy for today and tomorrow’s jobs in the kinds of industries that pay well and demand long term skill development.

We just announced, with TPS, a program where seniors can graduate from high school and from Owens Community college with a certificate in Emergency Medical Training (EMT). We are expanding this concept to a wide array of learning competencies between TPS and the City. For example, today auto mechanic students are offered internships, and engage in cooperative learning experiences, by working right alongside our city employees in a real world environment.

Stop the Brain Drain Create Ready Made Opportunities

Of paramount importance to Toledo is the need to stop the brain drain out of the City and the region. We want to nurture the talents of our Toledo children, certify skills that are being demanded locally and graduate students in diverse industries that reflect a well thought through, up to date, local economic development strategy. When our graduates remain here in Toledo and support the industries we bet on to grow and prosper, our prosperity for those industries and the workers and the City and region is assured.

University of Toledo /TPS Early Jobs Training, Program Priorities and Targeting

Since becoming mayor, I have worked with the University of Toledo and Toledo Public Schools to provide additional on the job training opportunities. Both of these institutional programs provide internships where students can apply their classroom education to real work experiences. “Toledo Talent Keeps Toledo Great” is the partnership with the University of Toledo where any student who desires to apply their classroom learning in a real work environment can find internships and other placement opportunities with the City of Toledo.

Additionally, the City of Toledo is providing advanced training for our City employees so that they can improve job performance, efficiency and job satisfaction.

Leave No Adult Citizen Behind Who Wants to Work Long Term

Our jobs revival and the building renaissance downtown are not completely affecting Toledo’s entire population evenly. In order to have all neighborhoods and sectors of society in Toledo, especially disadvantaged Toledoans, to become part of the resurgence; we must also focus on the most basic and the most desirable job training and talent development. Too many times, I talk to people who are looking for work and to businesses that are looking for people to work. Yes, somehow, they are not matching up. So what is missing? My administration will continue to work to advance the ball toward full employment, talent retention and skill development. I believe that there are three key principles we are advancing today:

1. Support intensive comprehensive demand-driven training methods;
2. Assess and prepare learners at various stages of training from early education to continuing adult training; and
3. Coordinate the workforce developments process centrally.

Summary

There is No Substitute for Skill and Talent and Investment in Training for Re-tooling Toward the Skills in Demand

Toledo’s biggest challenge is to recognize, cultivate and invest in talented local youth, retrain adults and facilitate the basic employment and retooling needs of our core employers. Also, we must diversify, rejuvenate and innovate in order to meet our changing 21st century job needs. Aviation, Advanced Manufacturing, Bioscience and Water Quality are just a few examples where we are looking to help our city to match facilitate industry growth and local economic diversification.

In order to Train Toledo I believe that we must:

1. Improve and retain local talent at every level: grade school, high school, college, and technical/professional
2. Train unemployed and underemployed youth and adults intensely;
3. Diversify our economy by leveraging local, private and public partnerships, the non-profit sector and working closer with our local education institutions - nurture our unique local assets and create defensible and long term diversification opportunities.

Don’t Stop Our Progress Let’s Remain on a Non-Stop Path to Improving Neighborhoods and Job Opportunities

There are always a precious few applicants whose skills match completely (100%) to open job opportunities. Citizens must position themselves to retool and seek the kinds of skills and experiences company’s treasure. Our City is working overtime to help citizens close the skills gap and to reduce the dreaded drip, drip, drip of the historical annual “brain drain” of our talented Toledo graduates who leave the City for lack of opportunity.

We approach our mission to succeed in fixing Toledo’s job growth and training needs in a step-wise generational way, proving out what will work then expanding our capacity strategically.

Believe it – Toledo is working – better than ever. Vote for Paula Hicks-Hudson, We are coming to you!

Please keep us on our non-stop path towards prosperity, neighborhood rejuvenation and full employment!

We can’t afford to reverse course, start over or to travel down a new road – the wrong way with Wade!
The struggle is real! The intergenerational conflict that exists between baby boomers and millennials or gen Xers is legit.

The boomers feel a lack of respect regarding their personhood and civic contributions on the part of younger generations. The older crowd also feels that they are being ridiculed and portrayed as a group that needs to be put out to pasture, far away from productive society, where they are best left to putter around the house with their flowers or in a rocking chair “where they belong.”

On the other hand, millennials, quick to point out perceived hypocrisy wherever encountered, seem to cry out “I can’t breathe” while grabbed by the throat and with the baton of leadership used as a weapon to cut off their wind of opportunity instead of being passed to them.

The truth is that we fall in love over and over with the same outdated dysfunctional political ideas as long as they come bearing new “names” or labels. And we repeatedly double down on the failed strategies of the past and are also addicted to resurrecting the long ago-buried, moldy and mildewed personalities that have abused us in the past.

With municipal elections scheduled November 7, the question becomes: Is there a way to utilize the wisdom and experience of an established generation while simultaneously incorporating the fresh, youthful ideas and activities of emerging generations?

To put it another way, can old dogs learn new tricks? Or, as Kanter (2002) asks, can we “manage new streams within the mainstream?”

The six at-large councilpersons that we choose on November 7 hold the answer.

Who will win?

The Sure Things:
1. Rob Ludeman. The fiscal conservative is one of two Republicans on City Council. Ludeman, a baby boomer, has served for 22 years and his re-election is a lock. He is also likely to be top vote getter.
2. Sandy Spang, like Ludeman, is also a baby boomer and comes out of powerful District 2. A political Independent, Spang came to municipal government late in life and brings her core issue of priority-based budgeting, a reprogrammed Department of Neighborhoods and other forward thinking ideas to government.
3. Cecilia Adams, PhD brings a storied family history of community leadership to the table and, like Spang, is a boomer who recently began to serve on City Council. Adams’ focus is on youth and finance, which she learned from her many years of teaching and administrative experience working for Toledo Public Schools.

Three the Hard Way:
The fiercest battles will take place for spots four through six. If citywide turnout is higher in the November 7 general election, expect to see some shuffling of the results that we saw in the primary.

4. Larry Sykes. A top six finisher in the primary, yet to be seen is whether Sykes’ dustup with young activist Julian Mack will affect his reelection. What an embarrassing mess!! Expect Sykes’ positioning to fall somewhat compared to his finish in the primary, but probably not out of the top six. However, a sizable turnout in the white areas could leave this senior politician on the outside looking in.
5. Nick Komives. A millennial and “fighter for the rights of all people.” The energy Komives has spent campaigning for environmental justice and “improving our failing infrastructure” could bear fruit and catapult him into a top six finish. Komives has knocked on a ton of doors. Will voters hear his message?
6. Sam Melden. Another millennial who, since the beginning of his candidacy, has maintained that Toledo needs fresh energy and leaders who are more focused on looking forward rather than backwards. Melden’s message of clean, safe and affordable drinking water should resonate with all of us. Will Sam’s great media message and hard work be enough to integrate youth into city government? We will see.

On the Bubble:
7. Gary Johnson. A multicultural baby boomer, Johnson finished sixth in the primary. Johnson, a local businessman with humble roots, recently had a nice media piece where he was... continued on page 15

A Change Is Coming at The Housing Court for the First Time in 18 Years

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

After 18 years serving as the judge of the Toledo Municipal Housing Court, the Honorable C. Allen McConnell is stepping down from his post because he is age-barred from seeking another term. Seeking to fill the position are two candidates who each have a deep understanding of the workings of the Housing Court. For Toledoans as a whole, there is perhaps no more important court in terms of its impact on the lives of so many.

Not many will be charged with a crime, now many will be sued in civil court and now that divorces and dissolutions are generally fairly routine procedures, the Housing Court impacts more Toledoans than any other court. Landlord/tenant disputes; fair housing issues; building renovations; building code violations – these are issues that can impact any member of the citizenry.

Jim Anderson

Republican Jim Anderson, an attorney in private practice, is running to replace Judge C. Allen McConnell on the Toledo Municipal Housing Court. For Anderson, election to the Municipal Court would bring his legal career full circle – back to the place where he first received practical experience in the law and to the court where he has returned so often as an advocate.

Anderson, who earned his undergraduate degree from the University of Connecticut and graduated from the University of Toledo College of Law, was hired by McConnell in 2007 to serve as the court’s Law Clerk and Bailiff during his first year in law school. He held the position until after the completion of his law degree, through the bar exam and his admittance to the Ohio State Bar in 2010.

In private practice, Anderson has been involved in virtually every kind of case seen in Municipal Court – disputes between landlord and tenants and those individuals before the Court for Housing Code violations of various sorts.

Larry Sykes: “Nobody Has My Experience!”

By Fletcher Word
Sojourner’s Truth Editor

“So anybody who does anything to try to weaken this ordinance, I will fight till hell freezes over and then fight them on the ice,” says Toledo City Councilman Larry Sykes of the lead abatement ordinance he urged his fellow councilmen to pass – an ordinance that has set the standard in Ohio for legislation dealing with the issue of lead poisoning, particularly in the inner cities.

For Sykes, the ordinance is simply part of the process of ensuring the well-being of Toledo’s citizens, particularly Toledo’s youth – a mission he feels he has been on for all of his years in public service.

A longtime member of the Lucas Metropolitan Housing Authority and the Toledo Board of Education, to name just a few, Sykes has spent a career focusing on the wellness and safety of those affected by his leadership. And the lead ordinance has brought a lot of that experience into focus for him.

“When I was on the LMHA board, I didn’t understand how lead impacted kids,” he recalls. When he was on the school board and in the midst of kids and learning of the problems those with disabilities had, the welfare of children came into sharp focus particularly with respect to the two key issues of lead and diet. While on school board, he explains, the administration brought in corporate partners and “we changed the whole food process.” Sykes oversaw the diet change from one consisting of grease, grease and chocolate milk to a balanced menu that includes fruit, vegetables and fruit.

After nearly four years on City Council, Sykes feels he has similarly helped to address an even more critical health hazard for area youngsters. “After being on the school board, I went up to the next level to ask ‘how does the city work with the school board to better serve kids?’”

Over the next four years his next task, he says, will be to work to obtain matching funds to eradicate the lead that’s so pervasive in local housing.

As Sykes describes his priorities as an elected legislator, they all revolve around the health and programs. “Nobody has my experience.”

For Sykes, City Council is the culmination of years of public service, years in which he says his leadership abilities have enabled him to get things done. Leadership, he explains “is being able to bring people together and is being able to sell what you know as being best for the public.”

For Sykes, the ordinance is simply part of the process of ensuring the well-being of Toledo’s citizens, particularly Toledo’s youth – a mission he feels he has been on for all of his years in public service.

The Scott High School graduate who attended Central State University retired from Fifth Third Bank after 30 years – a vice president and community affairs officer in his last position. He currently serves on a half dozen boards: Lucas County Children Services; St. Vincent Mercy Medical Center; the Mentoring Collaborative Advisory Council; University of Toledo African American Community Advisory Committee, the Victim Witness Program; along with City Council.

In the past, Sykes has been on more than three dozen different boards, commissions and associations, including a number of statewide positions.

“I bring experience,” he says of his lengthy record serving a number of causes and programs. “Nobody has my experience.”

One of Anderson’s chief concerns about the Court is its handling, now and in the future, of cases involving blight or potential blight caused by vacant buildings and lots. He applauds the progress that the Lucas County Land Bank has made in clearing vacant houses.

“What do we do about vacant lots? That’s blight also – it’s a situation where the lot is not serving a function, not helpful to youth or the beautification of a neighborhood. Folks like Thomas Jackson, who have taken those abandoned properties, getting them cleaned up – it’s my position that they should be encouraged and supported and applauded – that is exactly the type of energy we need to be doing city-wide.”

The Housing Court under Anderson’s direction – should he prevail in November – would be generally supportive of those efforts to improve property “and would not be looking to be punitive,” he says. The Housing Court, he says, needs to be “on the front line to improve neighborhoods.”

“I’m hoping to change hearts and minds about our properties and neighborhoods and our city. I want to bring a contagious love for our neighborhoods and city. It’s going to take everybody to do their best and be their best – I don’t think we are getting that now. Some things are being over-enforced, some things are being under-enforced.

“If a mom and pop don’t understand that they need a permit to fix the back railing and he’s out there with his circular saw and an inspector rolls up, puts a stop work order on it and says ‘you gotta go get a permit’ … I’m not crazy about that.

“On the other hand, if a contractor who’s not getting licenses and is doing those kinds of nickel and dime jobs for neighbors and not holding up his end, I want him to do it the right way too.

“We have to find that sweet spot.”

Joe Howe

After Joe Howe graduated from the University of Toledo, College of Law; earned a spot on Law Review and entered a profession in which he could become extensively involved in consumer protection matters – first in private practice, then for the past 11 years, in the City of Toledo Prosecutor’s Office working in the Housing Court. “The housing court was a natural fit for me with my civil background,” says Howe of the transition into his prosecutor’s duties.

“My role is, in large part, a mediator trying to get [visitors to the housing court] in compliance with the law.”

As a prosecutor he views himself as being in a position to “promote the interest of our neighborhoods,” while trying to ensure that parties are in compliance with laws that protect consumers, neighborhoods and the city in general.

“As a judge, I would look for a fair and equal application of the law; those who are damaging our neighborhoods need to be punished.” And, as a judge, Howe would propose some ideas that he believes will make life better for a host of Toledoans and, thus far, a number of labor unions who have endorsed him tend to agree.

Noting all the people who come into the housing court needing help because they have been cited for deficiencies by inspectors but do not have the wherewithal or funds to make the necessary repairs, Howe has proposed to a variety of building trades labor unions that they form a partnership with the court and provide apprentices to work voluntarily on such dwellings. The residents need the help, the apprentices need the work.

“All the unions have agreed that it’s a wonderful idea,” he says, and have agreed to the proposal and endorsed his candidacy. It is a win/win idea for homeowners and the building trades unions, he says, and will serve the additional goal of “getting rid of illegal contractors” – those scofflaws who prey on vulnerable homeowners and provide shoddy service.

To date, Howe has received endorsements from: Northwest Building and Construction Trades Council, Roofers Local 134, Sheet Metal Workers International Association Local 33, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 8, Carpenters Local 351, Cement Masons and Plasterers Local 886, Iron Workers Local 55, Plumbers, Steamfitters and Service Mechanics Local 50, Laborers Local 500, AFLCIO, United Food and Commercial Workers Local 75 and International Association of Heat and Frost Insulators and Asbestos Workers Local 45.

“I care deeply for the city of Toledo,” says the Democratic candidate.

“I have a vested interest in helping Toledo be the best that it can be. I have good ideas about how to do that with the insight and experience that no one else has.”

Shades of pink and vibrant accessories filled the Center of Hope Church, located at 1656 Dorr Street for their Shades of Pink Women’s Day service held on Sunday, October 22, 2017.

First Lady Willetta Perryman opened the service by welcoming all the guests. “Good to be here in the house of the Lord one more time. We’re here to celebrate and thank God for another year,”

A team of worship leaders comprised of Staci Perryman-Clark, PhD; Laurnetta Baylis of Canaan Manifested Word Church and Megan Davis of Braden United Methodist Church sang a spirit-filled rendition of the Lord’s Prayer as responsive readings were led by program honorees Prescilla Hutchens, Besie Mack, Doris Brooks, Claudette Abrams, Hazel Pettaway, Jeanette Martin, Sharon Merrit, and Barbara Oxner.

Health Department Reports Increase of Crypto Cases

The Toledo-Lucas County Health Department reports an increase in cases of Cryptosporidiosis (Crypto) in Lucas County in 2017. Over 120 cases of Cryptosporidium have been reported since the beginning of 2017, compared to 36 cases in 2016 year-to-date. Crypto is a disease that causes watery diarrhea. It is caused by a parasite called Cryptosporidium. The parasites can be found in food, water, soil, or on surfaces dirty hands that have been contaminated with the feces of humans or animals infected with Crypto.

The Toledo-Lucas County Health Department is diligently working to determine similarities among cases, and provide education to help prevent the spread of illness in the community.

Other than watery diarrhea, some individuals may report stomach cramps or pain, nausea, vomiting, fever, and dehydration. The symptoms typically develop 2 to 10 days (average 7 days) after becoming infected with the parasite.

Crypto can be spread by:
- Swallowing recreational water
  (for example, the water in swimming pools, fountains, lakes, rivers) contaminated with Crypto
- Drinking untreated water from a lake or river that is contaminated with Crypto
- Swallowing water, ice, or beverages contaminated with poop from infected humans or animals
- Eating undercooked food or drinking unpasteurized/raw apple cider or milk that gets contaminated with Crypto
- Touching your mouth with contaminated hands
- Hands can become contaminated through a variety of activities, such as touching surfaces or objects (e.g., toys, bathroom fixtures, changing tables, diaper pails) that have been contaminated by poop from an infected person, changing diapers, caring for an infected person, and touching an infected animal
- Exposure to poop from an infected person through oral-anal sexual contact
- Pet feces

Crypto is not spread through contact with blood.

To help prevent Crypto, practice proper hand hygiene before preparing or eating food; after using the toilet; before and after tending to someone who is ill with diarrhea and after changing diapers.

To keep swimming pools free from contamination, children and adults should not swim in a pool or enter a spa until at least two weeks after they have completely recovered from a diarrheal illness. Those concerned about their symptoms should contact their health-care provider. For more information on Cryptosporidium please visit cdc.gov/parasites/crypto.
Reps. Fedor, Kennedy Kent Introduce Healthcare Freedom for All Ohioans Legislation

Bill will ensure healthcare coverage for all regardless of income, current health

Special to The Truth

State Reps. Teresa Fedor (D-Toledo) and Bernadine Kennedy Kent (D-Columbus) today introduced the Ohio Health Security Act, a bill to establish a single-payer health care plan in Ohio to universally cover medical, dental and vision services. Payments to health care providers for all eligible benefits will be made from a single public fund, called the Ohio Health Care Fund.

“Even with the progress we’ve made, too many in Ohio are still struggling to get the care they need when they need it. It’s time for a change,” said Fedor. “Let’s face it. We all need healthcare at some point in our lives, and we shouldn’t have to mortgage our future to get it. Under the Ohio Health Security Act, every eligible Ohioan will be free to choose the plan and doctors that work best for their families without breaking the bank.”

Under the plan, every Ohioan may receive full health care coverage, regardless of income or employment status, and may freely choose their own health care providers for services such as outpatient services to prescription drugs, medical supplies and medical transportation without costly co-payments or deductibles. There will also be no exclusions for pre-existing conditions. Coverage from the Ohio Health Security Act would begin two years after the bill’s passage.

“While Congress continues to cut backroom deals and pass secret bills that will only work to increase costs and cut benefits for hardworking Ohioans, we’re putting together a concrete plan to make care affordable and flexible to work for you and your family,” said Kennedy Kent. “Taxpayers deserve a plan that gives them a real choice and the freedom to pick a plan that works for them.”

The new health care plans will be administered by the Ohio Health Care Agency, which will operate under the direction of the Ohio Health Care Board. The board will consist of two elected representatives from seven regions across the state and the director of the Ohio Health Care Agency. The board will:

- negotiate or set prices for health care services provided
- establish standards to demonstrate proof of residency
- provide each participating individual with identification that can be used by providers to establish eligibility for services
- seek all necessary waivers, exemptions, agreements, or legislation to allow various federal and state health care payments to be made to the Ohio Health Care Agency

Recent studies have shown substantial savings associated with single-payer systems, which work to establish market power, thereby cutting red-tape, reducing overhead costs and implementing cost controls, according to the Single Payer Action Network (SPAN). A full, detailed economic analysis on the potential impact of the Ohio Health Security Act is currently underway and set to be released in the coming months.

Mindful Holiday Eating

Beth Williams, UT Public Health Intern with OSU Extension, Lucas County

The Truth Contributor

The holiday season is a time to relish family, friends and of course food! It seems all the festivities revolve around meals and treats. Whether it is sweet potato pie, eggnog or a piece of homemade fudge, the temptations seem non-stop. From Halloween candy until the start of the new year, we are bombarded by opportunities to overindulge. The average American will consume more than 4,500 calories on Thanksgiving and gain approximately two pounds during the holiday season. This can accumulate over the years, and worse it can also trigger us to feel a need to diet in unhealthy ways come January 2.

Mindful eating can help avoid the “it’s the holidays so anything and everything goes” mentality and still enjoy your favorite foods. These tips can be used year-round, but are especially important to remember during the stressful holiday environment when nutrition is the last thing on your mind.

1) Do not skip meals- people often think if they don’t eat all day they can “save” the calories for a holiday party later in the day. This will likely result in overeating! Instead, eat a light breakfast and lunch that includes fruits, vegetables and whole grains. These foods include fiber, are lower in calories but will help satisfy hunger.

2) Use a smaller plate- many holiday meals are large, buffet-style pot-lucks. Using a small plate helps you put less food on your plate and choose proper portion sizes. Also, take a complete tour of the food available before you automatically start putting items on your plate. Choose foods you will enjoy that will meet a variety of food groups.

3) Be mindful with dessert- there will likely be a wide assortment of sweet treats. Rather than depriving yourself, choose one or two of your favorite items and enjoy them. You don’t need a large serving to savor the taste. Cut pies in 10-12 pieces instead of 8, or share half of that huge cookie.

4) Savor every bite- when you eat with awareness, instead of mindlessly, you maximize your enjoyment. Slow down- savor the appearance, aroma, texture and taste of the food. Eat your favorite food last because you remember the last food the best. This might help prevent you from eating more later.

5) Say “No thank you”- it isn’t your obligation to make others happy by overeating. If you have had enough, don’t be pressured to try that special holiday dish or go back for seconds just because some else wants you to. In the same way, please don’t pressure others to eat more food when they are done.

6) Pay attention to when you are full- many people overstuff themselves, especially at Thanksgiving dinner. It can be easier said than done to stop eating once you feel full. Just remember that there will be leftovers you can have another day. You will be able to relax and enjoy the company...
Caregiving Around the Clock

By Dianne Pettis, CRNP

The Truth Contributor

There are 90 million Americans who care for loved ones—of all ages—who have chronic illnesses, disabilities, or who are elderly or frail and cannot live on their own. The month of November calls attention to this fact of life. Please excuse me if I wrote about this topic in the past, but it’s tops in my mind because I live with it every day. My 82-year-old father lives with me. He has had two major strokes, heart attacks, has a pacemaker, Chronic Obstructive Pulmonary Disease (COPD), mild dementia, arthritis, high cholesterol, and high blood pressure. I watched my mother go through caring for my grandmother; taking her into her home after a stroke, while working full-time. My cousins, in-laws, and co-workers are all caregiving for parents. It’s like an epidemic.

Though done in love, caregiving can take a toll mentally, emotionally, and physically. It’s something we ‘have’ to do, so we go on. The Caregiver Action Network has offered 10 Tips for Family Caregivers:

1. Seek support from other caregivers. With 90 million other caregivers out there; we are definitely not alone. There are support groups locally. Go to www.caregiveraction.org for a list of national resources.

2. Take care of your own health. It is NOT selfish to do that. Eat well, exercise, and limit addictive substances.

3. Accept offers of help. It is not a sign of weakness. Have a list of specific things other people can do for you when they ask.

4. Learn how to effectively communicate with the doctors.

5. Take respite breaks often. Make some time for yourself every day to rest and recharge—even if it’s just 15 minutes. I put myself in ‘time out’.

6. Watch for signs of depression, and get help when you need it. Some signs are: angry outbursts; substance abuse; weight loss; weight gain; and physical symptoms such as headaches, stomach/digestion problems, and skin eruptions.

7. Be open to new technology that can help you care for your loved one.

Some newer things are: Smart Phone Touch3 by Samsung Galaxy for elderly adults; TLC Vibe clock with a vibrating wristband and an extra loud alarm; BeClose Sensor that tracks your loved one’s movements and activities, and can alert you for danger; Medcenter personal medication reminder alarm; and virtual medical appointments via video, or apps that will transmit blood sugar or blood pressure readings to the Primary Care Provider.

8. Keep medical information and medicine lists organized so it is easy to find and update. Organization is important because you never know when you may have to leave work, go to the hospital, your kids have a surprise school event, or you have a sudden health emergency of your own.

9. Make sure legal documents are in order. Give yourself credit for doing the best you can in the toughest job there is.

A tip for everyone else—Be kind to caregivers!

more if you don’t feel sick from overeating!

7) Be grateful— before eating, pause and take a few minutes to give thanks— to the farmers, the animals and the cooks. Savor your company and the food.

A few more reminders: At holiday gatherings don’t sit or stand where food is constantly in your line of sight. Also, don’t get caught by mindless food triggers, such as a bowl of candy or a plate of cookies sitting out on a table. If you are the host, offer some healthy fruit and vegetable options. Of if you are asked to bring a food item, go for the veggies! Choose a seasonal vegetable dish so you know there will be at least one healthy food choice. The Food Network has slimmed-down version recipes of many holiday favorites.

After dinner try to get some physical activity— go for a walk with the family or throw the football with the kids. Remember the holidays are to enjoy time spent with family and friends!

This time of year that is often full of busyness and temptations may disrupt your healthy routines. The service continued an alter prayer that was dedicated to the survivors of breast cancer and led by Rev. Angeline Johnson of Warren AME; scriptural reading by Councilwoman Cecelia Adams, PhD, of New Hope Porter’s Grove Church and a sermon delivered by Rev. Susan Smith, DMin, founder of Crazy Faith Ministries.

“We as people heal. We can’t seek healing until the spirit has moved us to transcend out of difficulty,” explained Smith.

shown touring Family House, a shelter for homeless families. His alignment with those who face unfortunate circumstances will help to capture a lot of the African American and minority vote. Johnson also has strong backing from the Democratic Party. Expect Johnson’s battle with millennials Komives and Melden for the final spot to be extremely tight.

8. Harvey Savage. Another boomer, Harvey Savage brings name recognition to the black community, in particular. Although Savage finished “in the money” during the primary, the media has taken great pains to distinguish the candidate from another Savage family known for their philanthropy. This time, however, Harvey Savage faces an uphill (but not impossible) battle to reach the final six.

9. Kurt Young. Middle-aged Kurt Young is a strong and committed candidate who currently serves as an appointed member of city council. Young has increased his presence and name recognition in the African-American community. However, I’m not sure that he has done enough to enable him to jump from position nine in the primary to the top six in the general election.

Can we all get along?

For certain, today’s younger candidates and electorate bring new paradigms both for living and governing. The younger generations are arguably more informed and not swayed by old paradigms of influence. They also are not likely to regard symbolism over substance and are not afraid (like many boomers) to talk about tough issues such as race. They also feel free to challenge and question the status quo (or systems of authority) using what previous generations regard as “irreverence.”

Yet, in order for intergenerational conflicts to heal, “new streams of ideals and activities flowing alongside the established mainstream” must occur. This true for not only people, but also for governments and cities.

Wade Doesn’t Work

A public records request for Mr. Kapszukiewicz’ office activity shows troubling data that raises doubts as to how much actual work the taxpayers are getting from Wade.

Every weekend is a long weekend for our County Treasurer. In just the preceding December and January alone, Mr. Kapszukiewicz was absent on six Mondays, and five Fridays. In all, he missed seventeen days of work out of forty two days during the work week, and had no activity at all on weekends or holidays.

When Mr. Kapszukiewicz did log in to his taxpayer provided account, hundreds of instances arise of visits to ESPN, Pinterest, and Facebook, following news about the Cleveland Indians and Detroit Lions, including a flow charts of the Lions Playoff scenarios, a strange Gif titled “Shit Happens Bum Juice,” as well as one sexist photo commenting on the appearance of ESPN commentator Sam Ponder.

Mr. Kapszukiewicz also took the time to read news articles covering his run for mayor, visiting the Toledo Blade numerous times, specifically the January story on the screening process for the Lucas County Democratic Party’s endorsement. While his interest in the endorsement from our party is flattering, the Party wishes Mr. Kapszukiewicz had been working for the people of Lucas County instead.

Equally troubling is the fact that Mr. Kapszukiewicz visited his campaign website, campaign Twitter account, and MYNGP, a political data website used by campaigns across the country, while he should have been working for the taxpayers.

It is alarming and problematic that Mr. Kapszukiewicz is campaigning from an official account. Mr. Kapszukiewicz should make clear to the people here in Lucas County who is paying for the NGP account he is using - if it is taxpayers then why is it entwined with his campaign? If it is his campaign, then why is he accessing it and using it from an official account?

Toledoans work, Toledoans punch the clock at full-time jobs. Toledoans expect a full-time mayor. Mr. Kapszukiewicz is proving that he is a below average part-time worker who is not doing the job he was elected to do. He is out of touch with the hard work ethic Toledo shows every day. While Mr. Kapszukiewicz may be able to hide from the public and take long weekends as Treasurer, he will not be able to do so as Mayor. Being Mayor mandates actually working hard every day, including weekends, not simply showing up a few days a week to campaign and surf the websites for ESPN, Twitter, Facebook, the Toledo Blade, and Pinterest. Mayor Hicks-Hudson puts in the hard work and keeps Toledo working.
