Shift Your Privilege to Become an Empathy Archeologist

All Ohio Residents Ordered To Stay At Home*

By Diana Patton

Being an empathy archeologist can be challenging due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and the recent Ohio "Stay at Home Order," issued by Governor Mike Dewine, from the Director of the Ohio Department of Health, Amy Ashton. PLEASE take the time to read the Ohio Department of Health Order <http://www.documentcloud.org/documents/6816967-20200322143820416.html>, in its entirety, for more detail.

However, please note, we may leave our homes for Essential Activities, as defined under Section 5, and Essential Travel, as defined under Section 14. We can travel to care for loved ones and friends who are elderly, minor, dependent, persons with disabilities, or other vulnerable people.

PLEASE take the time to learn how you can help and follow the guidelines under the Order.

COVID-19 blasted a spotlight on the inequities that exist within our education system.

School administrators and educators have been working tirelessly to figure out how to provide online curriculums to help students complete the year, while, at the same time, they are also trying to find a way to provide breakfast and lunch to students who would otherwise go hungry if it were not for free or reduced breakfast and lunch at school.

Hourly-wage working parents are devastated, trying to figure out how to take time off of work to provide care for their kids, while also trying to figure out the right environmental balance for their kids to take advantage of the online learning that the schools offer. In many cases, these parents do not even have WIFI and often rely upon the libraries that are now, sadly, closed.

These inequities existed way before COVID-19, as evidenced by the Ohio Department of Education’s discovery of a 15-year achievement gap that states that “Ohio’s education system is not effectively meeting the needs of students, such as African-American, Hispanic, English learners (EL), economically disadvantaged students, and students with disabilities.”

To solve this issue, the ODE states that the “path to equity begins with a deep understanding of the history of discrimination and bias and how it has come to impact current society.” The ODE is asking schools to look at the whole child and seek to understand their specific needs.

The only way to clearly understand where these needs exists for each child is for each school, each educator, each person to take time for a bit of introspection to understand the rights or benefits that they have been given either at birth or from someone, or that were earned over time, due to ACCESS to various opportunities.

Not everyone has been born into or given the same rights or benefits, nor have they been able to earn these benefits, in most cases, due to the lack of ACCESS to the same opportunities.

These rights or benefits are called privilege, and they afford us a certain amount of status and power. Some of us aren’t aware of the privileges we hold and the positive opportunities they have the potential to bring to us and to others. Sadly, in some cases, folks have felt alienation, separation, offense, and resentment when the word “privilege” is brought up.

Let’s localize this a bit:
• Why do certain public schools get more money to educate a child than others?
• Why doesn’t everyone have FREE WIFI to take advantage of online learning?
• Why isn’t every classroom equipped with the right amount of resources to assist children who have special learning needs?
• Why aren’t ALL educators required to undergo intensive social and emotional learning, unconscious bias, and trauma-sensitive practices learning, that have been proven to equip educators with the tools to effectively meet the needs of the whole child?
• Why do we continuously administer standardized tests that are inherently known to be biased against certain groups of people?
• Why are African-American students nearly four times as likely to be suspended from school as Caucasians, oftentimes for the same offense?
• Why are certain communities afforded clean drinking water and others are not?

The list goes on.

With the onset of COVID-19, let’s all do our best to recognize and embrace the privileges that we hold, seek to understand others who do not have the same privileges, and become what I call “empathy archeologists,” and find ways to gift our privilege forward in a respectable, kind, dignified, and compassionate manner.

Here are steps for you to consider:
1. Recognize your privilege. Take this quick assessment if you are unclear as to the privileges that you hold.
2. Check your sphere of influence. This does not need to be a detailed assessment. This is just a high-level review, especially in light of COVID-19. The point of this exercise is to see others and recognize that some of us may... continued on page 10

Along with eight Toledo Public Schools and assorted Connecting Kids to Meals locations, The Wayman Palmer YMCA started handing out breakfast and lunch to kids this past week.

TPS, by Friday, was handing out an estimated 1,800 combo lunch and breakfast bags to students at eight locations – the six high schools plus Jones Leadership Academy and Devilbiss.

Deputy Superintendent Jim Gault noted that such an effort reflected TPS’ mission of not only educating students but also looking out for their overall welfare.

The Toledo Buffalo Soldiers MC have teamed up with Off The Rails Food Truck to deliver breakfast to the students and young people in the neighborhood surrounding the Wayman Palmer YMCA which began Thursday morning, March 19, at 8 a.m.

Each morning for as long as they can attract funding the TBS and Jim Rhegness of Off The Rails will prepare and serve a healthy breakfast each morning thanks to the support of Mathews Ford in Oregon, Earnest Brew Works, Pro Medica, and individual contributors.

Because of the coronavirus crisis, the Wayman Palmer YMCA can no longer provide the child care services they normally would. This leaves dozens of children without the first meal of the day.

The daily cost to provide the meals is approximately $250 so local support will be solicited in the coming weeks.

Eric Williams, executive director of Wayman Palmer YMCA, was on hand along with Earl Mack, president of the Toledo Buffalo Soldiers, and Chef Jim Rhegness, owner-operator of Off The Rails Food Truck.

Where to Go if You Need to Be Tested for the Novel Coronavirus

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

Are you at risk?

The bad news about the novel coronavirus is that the United States lags far behind so many other nations in making the tests available for its citizens. The U.S. and South Korea, for example, became aware at about the same time of the danger the virus might pose, yet since that time, South Korea has conducted about four times the number of tests that the United States has – a of this past Monday.

Both are numbers changing hourly, of course.

But are you sick? Or at risk?

You may indeed have contracted the coronavirus, which leads to COVID-19, if you have such symptoms as a runny nose, a dry cough, a sore throat, a fever, chest pains and trouble breathing.

The complicating fact is that you might have the coronavirus and be asymptomatic for the first five or six days after you contract the virus.

The fatality rate for COVID-19 appears to be between two and three percent, or about 20 times the fatality rate for most influenzas. People at the greatest risk for a severe reaction to COVID-19 are those who are obese, or have high blood pressure, cardiac issues, respiratory issues, diabetes. Being elderly, with a combination of such health issues, compounds the risk.

It’s not particularly easy to get tested, if you feel that it may be necessary. In this area, a testing site has been established at the Botanical Garden, 5403 Elmer Drive. However, you cannot just show up and expect to be tested.

First, you have to call the Nurses Line at 419-251-4000 or 419-291-5355. The line is open 24/7. When you are connected, you will be pre-screened and, if eligible, given a time to go to Botanical Garden.

Once there, a sample will be taken, the sample will be sent to Columbus and the Health Department will call you back, within 72 hours, with the results.

And, in fact, if you do have COVID-19, the next step is usually … nothing.

There is no magic pill, no cure, for COVID-19. If you are really sick, chances are, before you receive the test results, you will have gotten yourself to Urgent Care or a hospital for admittance and treatment of the severe symptoms. At this point, the tests, as scarce as they are, serve mainly as a point of information for government agencies such as the Centers for Disease Control.

But gathering that information enables government agencies to assess the actions that need to be done to contain the coronavirus because since there is no cure, containment is the only available solution thus far.

Since there is no cure, health workers will not have nearly the impact of government agencies around the world in containing the COVID threat. The Imperial College London group, in a recent study, projects that if nothing more is done by the U.S. and U.K. governments, given their late starts, as many as 510,000 U.K. citizens and 2.2 million U.S. citizens might die of the disease.
Greater Toledo Community Foundation Establishes COVID-19 Response Fund

Financial assistance available for northwest Ohio and southeast Michigan nonprofits negatively affected by Coronavirus

The Greater Toledo Community Foundation announced last week that it has established a COVID-19 Response Fund to support northwest Ohio and southeast Michigan nonprofit organizations as they assist in responding to the spread of COVID-19 in the community and experience financial challenges in doing so. The Foundation will seed the COVID-19 Response Fund with a $100,000 contribution from its unrestricted funds (aka Community Funds) to respond to immediate needs, and will continue to raise additional funding for ongoing expenses incurred by nonprofits. “The Foundation is prepared to leverage its resources to support sudden and unexpected needs that arise in our community,” said Keith Burwell, president, Greater Toledo Community Foundation.

“Just as in the 2008 Great Recession and the 2014 Water Crisis, we are responding with grant opportunities to support any unexpected expense incurred by our local nonprofits during the COVID-19 pandemic.”

Local nonprofits can request funding directly through the Foundation’s online grants system. The Foundation staff will also seek recommendations from local agencies such as the County Health Departments, School Districts, the United Way and others to identify nonprofit organizations that can most efficiently deploy funding resources for the greatest impact, while continuing to work with the State of Ohio through Philanthropy Ohio and State Health Director Dr. Amy Acton, formerly with the Columbus Foundation.

Guidelines and funding priority areas for this competitive grant process have been announced on the GTCF website: www.toledocf.org. Due to the evolving nature of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Response Fund will not operate on a definite timeline. In order to move resources quickly, Greater Toledo Community Foundation will distribute grants on a rolling basis. As conditions change, Foundation staff will coordinate with the Grants and Distribution Committee (a sub-committee of the GTCF Board) to determine when funding considerations should cease, or if alterations should be made to the distribution process. “Community Foundations across the U.S. have been stepping up their response to COVID-19 – creating new funds to support those affected and partnering with local governments and health organizations to help contain its spread” “As our community’s philanthropic first responder, Greater Toledo Community Foundation has activated our rapid response fund to collect donations to aid in coronavirus relief. One hundred percent (100%) of donations to this fund will be granted to nonprofits working in northwest Ohio and southeast Michigan. Those who wish to contribute to the COVID-19 Response Fund may do so here.

Local Barber Shops and Beauty Salons Adjust to the COVID 19 Mandated Quarantine

By Megan Davis
Sojourner's Truth Reporter

Barber shops and beauty salons are often community hubs where people gather to discuss current events, provide a listening ear, meet up with and create trending styles for customers from day to day.

Regular customers have relationships with their hair stylist or barber. Their hair specialists know what styles and products work best for their clients, and they have a unique method to fashion flattering looks for them.

You may go into a barber shop and see someone playing chess or watching a game or boxing match. The commentary is full of energy and may become a debate every now and then. There’s nothing like seeing brothers dap it up, talk to young men about life and to see young boys getting clean cut for school as their parents often look on.

Likewise, when women go into a salon, they have looked forward to their appointment and can be seen relaxing, reading a book under the dryer or watching a movie and discussing it with other customers. When their hair is done, they often feel magical, like they just had their crown adjusted and they leave ready to seize the day with confidence.

Black barbers and hair stylists are often self-employed; not many work in chain salons these days. So there isn’t much income earned by way of hourly wages that are paid out on a weekly or bi-weekly schedule. They also may own a salon or shop or rent a booth.

For many, hair cultivation is a primary source of income and has sustained the livelihood of these small business owners for years. While several barbers operate on a walk-in basis, salon owners tend to schedule appointments to provide one-on-one service with as little wait time as possible. There is a science to it all, maintaining a space, a schedule, finances, building and equipment maintenance and balancing family. But they do it, and some even involve their families in their businesses.

With the rapid changes the coronavirus pandemic has imposed on everyone, Ohio Governor Mike DeWine has mandated that most businesses close their doors, including salons and barber shops. He has also issued a “stay home” order as well, keeping people indoors unless it is absolutely necessary to go out.

This new normal of being indoors, not working and trying to plan next steps has proven to be a challenge for salon and barber shop owners.

“Honestly, it has affected me and other stylists a lot. It was very unexpected can’t work in the salon and it’s illegal to work from home. I am still responsible for paying rent at a location I can’t occupy or operate in. Should this go on for a prolonged period of time, I will be forced to seek employment alternatives.” stated Alondra Hadley, owner of The Social Lounge Salon in South Toledo.

This is a sentiment that has resonated among these small business owners who may be scrambling to find a way to continue caring for their families with as little disruption as possible. “This pandemic has really hurt small... continued on page 8 businesses greatly. I am very hopeful that we as an industry, community, city, state and a nation will come through this. I will now begin restructuring and planning for the long haul. Although I have more financial responsibilities now, I’m in a better situation compared to the last recession,” said Doug Keeton, owner of Studio 329.

While many weren’t prepared for the uncertainty this pandemic has created, some stylists are cautiously optimistic. Tiffany Thomas is a local stylist/braider who just added apprenticeship training to her business stated, “People are still trying to book and unfortunately I have to turn them away; but with savings, it allows me to be okay until this blows over.”

In small business, there aren’t a lot of resources in place for situations as unique and as abrupt as the COVID 19 social distancing has caused. Keeton continues, “I’m disappointed in the insurance industry. Most business insurance policies have a product for loss of income. They don’t tell you until you file a claim they don’t cover a virus. I wish all the governors will follow New Jersey Governor Phil Murphy: he’s passing a law to make all insurance companies cover all claims from Covid 19. The saddest part is insurance companies want businesses to still pay premiums and their businesses are closed due to this virus, lacking empathy for us.”

Many small businesses are often uninsured. The current $2 trillion economic stimulus plan, as introduced in Congress, is being ironed out in Washington, as of Monday this week. It could provide a great relief to these struggling businesses who could potentially fold under these closures. Although both Democrats and Republicans agree on the urgency of the matter, they can’t agree on all of the proposed provisions which currently would give families of four up to $3,000, expand unemployment benefits and offer loans to tide over small businesses like hair salons. Democrats are blocking moving ahead because Republicans are resisting that portion of the proposition. Negotiations continue and it is hoped that a favorable vote will take place this week.

Just last month, The Toledo Museum of Art’s Circle Group, in partnership with ProMedica, hosted The Art of the Cut, where nearly 1,000 guests attended throughout the day. Local barbers took center stage to create haircuts from yesterday, today and the future. Because barber shops are often sanctuaries for men, Robin Charney of ProMedica, has been going into the shops for over two years, talking about black men’s health, while offering free health screenings.

A partnership that has evolved into an event that brings art and health together on one platform. One of the barbers featured at Art of the Cut was Andre Johnson of Fletcher’s Hair Design in West Toledo. While this temporary shutdown has affected his business somewhat, his part-time employment in a local factory helps him take care of his immediate needs until the quarantine passes. When asked if he and the other barbers keep in touch, he said “Yes, but since we are unsure of how long this will last, we are doing our best to prepare to reopen when the time comes.”

Ray Vargas, who also was an Art of the Cut participant and owner of Victory Barber shop in West Toledo shared that while everything is put on hold, he has a back-up plan. However, having to close his business down, not being able to do what he loves is also heart wrenching.

The Beauty Mark Luxury Beauty Bar, slated to open next month is delayed due to the quarantine. Owner Ty Keysa Harris said she will continue renovations throughout this time since she has invested in her new salon. “This is my main source of income, so it’s definitely taking a toll on my budget. Even though they’ve given us a grace period to not pay certain bills, they will still accumulate and be due once this epidemic is over. I have a young song to care for and I don’t want to be in a financial hole. I’ve come too far not to see this vision come to pass!”

As these salons and barber shops sit closed, with darkened windows, and uncertainty mounts, barbers and hairstylists alike are hopeful for a new lease on business when the lights are back on, and their chairs are filled again.

Larry Walker is a stylist at Studio 329 and has a positive perspective on the situation. “Well this whole thing is a reality check. I feel like for me it’s a reset. Time to reflect on me and what I’m actually doing in the world. I worked for a few days from home but stopped and at this point I’m relying on God to do what he said and be a provider and to be a shoulder and to be my eyes when I can’t see! I’m just gonna get myself in position for the bounce back because once this lifts, we will be bombarded by people wanting their pretty back!”
Toledo Chapter of Jack and Jill Hosts Statewide Children’s Cluster

The Toledo Chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc., of the Mid-Western Region, hosted the first ever All-Ohio 2020 Children’s Cluster at the Toledo Museum of Art (TMA). Nationally, Children’s Clusters are held by Jack and Jill regions as a way to bring children together for a day of learning while having fun with their peers. The Toledo Chapter planned and hosted the event in collaboration with TMA. Participating chapters were Akron, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Erie Shores, Toledo and Youngstown. In total, there were 139 attendees.

The theme was “Paint and Poetry: Creating the Masterpiece in You”.

Under the leadership of Toledo Chapter President Angelita Cruz Bridges, Event Chair Jeanna Temple, Co-Chair Rita Russell and the cluster committee worked hard to ensure the event was successful. Children kindergarten through fifth grade participated in an enriching and educational activity entitled “Sculpture All Around,” that explored objects and materials to make 3D Art. Children also had the opportunity to paint their own self-portrait.

Mothers and children joined to participate in “Global Conversations: Art in Dialogue” that allowed the opportunity to use various materials to make their own collaged creations. Mothers also engaged in an “Ekphrastic” poetry guided tour. The Tween group, which consists of sixth through eighth students, participated in an inspiring Improv workshop designed by Jack and Jill of America, Inc., Mid-Western Region. They learned the art of improvisation during their workshop, led by drama instructor Rosie Best of Issue Box Theatre.

The children were divided into groups to choose a legislative advocacy topic to perform an improv skit. Their skits were judged by local leaders including: Paula Hicks-Hudson, Ohio Representative of the 44th District, Judge Myron Duhart of Lucas County Common Pleas Court, and Ashely Funell, Assistant U.S. Attorney. The whole experience ignited participants’ creativity and personal reflection as they created the masterpiece within them.

Jack and Jill of America, Inc. is a membership organization of mothers with children ages two-19, dedicated to nurturing future African-American leaders by strengthening children through leadership development, volunteer service, philanthropic giving and civic duty.

have different starting points and privileges that we hold. Start by checking your colleagues, those you lead, your students, their parents, your neighbors, your immediate and extended family, especially the elderly, your interest or service groups, your church, synagogue, or spiritual place of worship, and other areas of your life.

3. Learn of their needs. Call, text, or video chat those in your sphere of influence and discover ways that you can learn and meet people, right where they are. Ask what they need. This will take intention and effort - to learn and meet people where they are, who may not be the same as you.

4. Gift your privilege forward - with respect, dignity, and compassion. Now that you’ve learned from someone, do you see ways that you can gift your privilege forward? No? Not to worry. This takes time. Don’t rush this. The only way you know what type of gift to give to someone is to learn and empathize with their pain points.

Being an empathy archetypal is essential if a person or family is quarantined or in social isolation due to COVID-19. We can all consider offering to drop food/drinks at the door of those who are quarantined, offer to help with yard work, run errands, or send books and games.

The bottom line is that when we ALL RISE and learn about our own privilege and what it affords us, when we seek to understand and become empathy archaeologists, we are able to see when a person is underprivileged - we can see the seemingly insurmountable number of closed doors and limited opportunities that they have to endure. And to someone who is underprivileged, it can feel exceedingly difficult to overcome. I pray that we all do our very best to shift our privilege to become empathy archaeologists and be the change that we all should be.

Kaptur Announces $425,000 in Federal Funds for Toledo’s Fair Housing Center

Funds will be used to strengthen efforts to prevent and eliminate housing discrimination in Toledo

Congresswoman Marcy Kaptur (OH-09), senior member of the House Appropriations Committee, last week announced $425,000 in federal funds for The Fair Housing Center in Toledo to strengthen its work to prevent and eliminate housing discrimination. The funds were allocated through the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) Fair Housing Initiatives Program (FHIP), which funds fair housing organizations and other nonprofits that assist individuals who believe that they have been victims of housing discrimination.

Of the $425,000, $300,000 will be used to open a minimum of 80 new complaint-based and systemic housing discrimination cases, while assisting over 600 complainants, and providing over 800 referrals to other agencies; conduct over 24 case review meetings; coordinate, execute, and evaluate a minimum of 48 tests; recruit and train new testers; conduct a minimum of two refresher trainings for veteran testers; conduct onsite accessibility visits/audits; resolve a minimum of 25 housing discrimination complaints and other alleged violations of fair housing laws; and conduct various enforcement related and educational and outreach activities.

The remaining $125,000 will be used to conduct several outreach events, including producing and distributing an educational video that will illustrate the impact of Zip Code on life outcomes. Upon completion, the organization will host a premier featuring a screening and panel discussion to raise awareness of the connection between place and opportunity. The organization will also use advertisements to educate the public about fair housing rights for people with disabilities, and develop new printed material and a webinar to educate the public about fair housing rights for people with disabilities.

“I am so grateful for the important work The Fair Housing Center carries out on a daily basis to prevent and eliminate housing discrimination in our community,” said Rep. Kaptur. “Discriminatory housing practices continue to be a barrier for many who seek housing. Thankfully, The Fair Housing Center has been there to educate housing providers, provide resources to individuals who’ve faced housing discrimination, and hold bad actors accountable when necessary. At a time of immense economic and social upheaval related to the global coronavirus pandemic, the work of the Fair Housing Center is as important as ever. Thank you to the Fair Housing Center for their unwavering dedication and service to the Toledo community.”

“The Fair Housing Center is grateful that HUD announced these awards in the midst of a national health crisis so that we can continue providing vital resources to our community,” said Marie Flannery, president and CEO of The Fair Housing Center. “Now more than ever, it is essential that all people are able to access safe and stable housing, free from discrimination and other barriers. We appreciate the support of Congresswoman Kaptur and other leaders in Congress who have fought to preserve this grant program, which has served as a critical funding source for us and many other fair housing organizations across the country. The funding provided through these grants allows us to continue our work addressing and preventing discriminatory practices, in order to create more inclusive, vibrant neighborhoods of opportunity for all.”

Fair housing organizations and other nonprofits that receive funding through the Fair Housing Initiatives Program (FHIP), such as The Fair Housing Center, assist people who believe they have been victims of housing discrimination.

FHIP organizations partner with HUD to help people identify government agencies that handle complaints of housing discrimination. They also conduct preliminary investigation of claims, including sending “testers” to properties suspected of practicing housing discrimination. Testers are minorities and whites with the same financial qualifications who evaluate whether housing providers treat equally-qualified people differently.

In addition to funding organizations that provide direct assistance to individuals who feel they have been discriminated against while attempting to purchase or rent housing, FHIP also has initiatives that promote fair housing laws and equal housing opportunity awareness.
Making Our Way Home: The Great Migration and the Black American Dream by Blair Imani, illustrated by Rachelle Baker, foreword by Patrisse Cullors

By Terri Schlichenmeyer
The Truth Contributor

You are not safe.
How scary is that? If someone told you that your life was in danger right now, and they were serious, what would you do? Where would you go, and who would you seek for help? In the new book Making Our Way Home by Blair Imani, your ancestors may have looked for answers to those questions hundreds of miles away.

In the months after President Lincoln’s Emancipation Proclamation “marked the beginning of the end of... slavery in the United States,” it quickly became apparent that equality for black people in many places was not going to happen – in fact, in some areas of the U.S., racism and Jim Crow laws kept even the smallest advantage out of the reach of newly-freed slaves. It was frustrating, disorienting, and it could be dangerous: people were sometimes lynched and killed just for living their lives.

At around the turn of the last century, black Americans began to hear that life in the North and West was better – maybe not totally equal, but jobs were plentiful, decent housing was easier to get, education was available for black children, and some companies even helped black workers get settled in a new life. Tens of thousands of black Southerners headed to New York, Chicago, and parts North, while others went to California and Oklahoma.

When World War I began, black soldiers did their part in the effort and were proud to do it. After they came home, though, they were disappointed to see that nothing had changed at all; the same thing happened at the end of World War II, after men and women alike served at home and abroad: inequality was still in force here in the States. This started the “second wave” of the Great Migration: at the end of both wars, black Americans headed North and West, including black musicians, singers, athletes, writers, and scholars.

And yet, there was still “disillusionment and frustration,” at continued inequality, which “laid the foundation of the Civil Rights movement”...

Much as you hate to judge a book by its cover (weren’t we warned about that?), it may be hard for your child not to do with Making Our Way Home.

On the outside, this book looks an awful lot like a text book. That’s unfortunate, because author Blair Imani packs a superb amount of story inside the covers, and history isn’t the only thing your child will get here. Imani also writes about the people who migrated, moves which opened doors for their unique talents. She includes LGBTQ individuals and those outside the mainstream. Kids will learn about social issues and events that culturally impacted the Great Migration (which Imani treats as one event, rather than two “waves”), and the illustrations by Rachelle Baker are great draws to empowering stories.

Ultimately, pride emanates strongly from the pages of Making Our Way Home, and that should make it easier to get your 10-to-15-year-old interested, despite the books’ academic look. One page is all it’ll take, and enjoyment is a safe bet.

Remember, remember....?

Skipping school, good teachers, hard lessons, practical jokes, smelly lockers, remember? If you don’t, your oldest friends probably do. As in the new book The Last Negroes at Harvard by Kent Garrett with Jeanne Ellsworth, they were there alongside you when everything happened, remember?

For many years, Kent Garrett claimed that he “rarely thought about Harvard.” Yes, it was his alma mater, but there was more to him than his graduation from an Ivy League school. He had a career and, later, a dairy farm to run. Being one of a handful of “Negro” graduates from an esteemed college was a small part of who Garrett was.

But then he discovered that a Harvard upper-classmate died, and he began to do what he said he didn’t: he thought about Harvard.

Garrett was just 17 the fall of 1959, when his family drove him to Harvard and helped him carry his belongings to a room he would share with another boy, one who happened also to be a “Negro.” There were, as Garrett later learned, 18 “Negroes” in the class of 1963, scattered among various dorms. Eventually, he met most of them, and they gathered daily to eat lunch; they also socialized together because, although Harvard strove to avoid racism, social segregation off-campus was still generally mandatory.

As they moved into their dorms that fall, Americans were just learning that the Soviet Union was capable of launching missiles from submarines. A war in a country halfway across the world had its first two casualties. Mike Wallace had done a TV report on Black Muslims and Malcolm X, shocking white America.

The freshmen who hoped they’d survive at Harvard became sophomores, then juniors, then seniors.

In their college careers, the “Negroes” saw protests and sit-ins, violence and calls for peace. They met people who’d influence history, and others who’d die too early. And by the time they graduated, eighteen men had learned that they were not “Negroes” anymore...

It’s really hard not to love The Last Negroes at Harvard right from the get-go.

Author Kent Garrett tells his story with a gee-whiz, down-to-earth demeanor that makes friends with a reader quickly. It’s a warm tale that can be confusing in its overload of names and nicknames, but Garrett’s portrayals of his classmates lets readers know that these young men were nevertheless unique individuals with ideals, strengths, and promise.

But this book isn’t only about 18 black men.

It’s also a snapshot of a burgeoning Civil Rights Movement, and a country that’s evolving. We get a peek of life on the edge of change, when college-age men wore ties to dinner. We watch as protests arrived in Boston, “the Pill” was whispered-about, segregation eased in the North, sit-ins became a thing, and language changed, too.

Know that this is not merely a book of nostalgia for older folk: it’s also for younger readers heading for college, or for lovers of social history. Sit down with this book and be delighted. The Last Negroes at Harvard is one you’ll remember.

Small Business Development Center (SBDC) at the Toledo Regional Chamber of Commerce Available to Assist Local Businesses with SBA Economic Injury Disaster Loan Process

Last week, Governor Mike DeWine and Lt. Governor Jon Husted sent a letter and application to the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) to qualify the State of Ohio for the Economic Injury Disaster Loan program. This federal program will enable small businesses and non-profits throughout the state impacted by the outbreak of COVID-19 to apply for low-interest loans up to $2 million in assistance that can provide vital economic support to help overcome the temporary loss of revenue they are experiencing. Once the state is qualified for the program, Ohio Development Services Agency will work with the SBA to notify entities that they can now apply for loans. “Do not wait until the ‘Disaster Declaration’ has been approved to start gathering the information you will need to apply for a SBA loan,” urges Bill Wersell, Small Business Development Center (SBDC) Director at the Toledo Regional Chamber of Commerce.

The online forms will not be available on the SBA’s website until after the declaration has been made for your county. But you can download hard copies at www.toledo chamber.com [http://r20.rs6.net/tjn.jsp?f=001kijdD0qU2r_todjg3S6b1GQ3DGPk9287978s2t50JeNQ==&c=z-1a265fbbf885cy8GuvSs4ykU6LvIRQQGQd8b70u42b9p39A/FuMuMw==&ch=7c0i0pg3xLDFZM4PUSyZGN90_4yV74aWx75mnNUnATZiIv9aw==] and begin preparing them today.

Eligible businesses include small business concerns, private non-profits, aquacultures, small agriculture cooperatives. The Economic Injury Disaster Loans may be used by Ohio small business owners and non-profits to pay fixed debts, payroll, accounts payable and other bills that can’t be paid because of the disaster’s impact. The interest rate is 3.75 percent for small businesses and 2.75 percent for non-profits. Additional information about the SBA Economic Injury Disaster Loan program is available at (https://www.sba.gov/disaster-assistance/coronavirus-covid-19 [http://r20.rs6.net/tjn.jsp?f=001kijdD0qU2rtodjg3S6b1GQ3DGPk9287978s2t50JeNQ==&c=z-1a265fbbf885cy8GuvSs4ykU6LvIRQQGQd8b70u42b9p39A/FuMuMw==&ch=7c0i0pg3xLDFZM4PUSyZGN90_4yV74aWx75mnNUnATZiIv9aw==]).
